disappointment to be endured for years. A carpet, for instance, should not be purchased without considering what the color of the paint is; and so of the sofa and chairs, if they are upholstered. A carpet is like the background of a picture, it brings into effect the whole.
Styles for carpets have entirely changed within a few years. Patterns of huge bouquets of impossible flowers used to be seen almost everywhere; now a very small, set figure, so small as to look almost like a plain color at a little distance, is in much better taste. This may be enlivened by a border of bright colors. The lovely pearl and gray grounds, with vines or tracery of a darker shade, and bright borders of Persian patterns, are very desirable, and look well with almost everything. The fashion of staining floors black-walnut color for a yard or more around the walls, and having a square of bordered carpet in the center, is gaining ground, and much liked for the pretty style and the convenience of taking it up for cleaning. It is also economical. There are now plain, ingrain carpetings, in solid colors, called "filling," which are used around these center rugs, instead of staining the floor. We have seen parlors carpeted with dark, turquoiseblue filling, with Persian rugs over them, not in any set or regular order. The effect was very good.—Ethel Stone, in American Agriculturist.

LIKE HER GREAT-GREAT-GRANDMOTHER.—A few days ago Miss Jennie Hazen, of Angola township, was passing a second-hand picture dealer's store in Buffalo, when she noticed among some old paintings a picture that was a striking likeness of herself. Looking at the reflect of herself in the window, and then upon the old painting, the resemblance was wonderful. The young lady, who is only sixteen years old, returned home to Angola full of her discovery, insisting that some one had been painting her picture and arranging her as a fright (the girl of the painting was dressed in the style of the last century). Incited by curiosity, some of the family went to Buffalo, and upon seeing the picture were as amazed as Miss Jennie.
Their bewilderment was increased by deciphering the name Jennie on the back of the painting.
It also bore the name of the artist, "Richardson, Philadelphia." The painting was bought for $3.50, and was sent to the young lady's grandmother in Erie, Mrs. Dr. M. J. Clark, who recognized it as the portrait of her grandmother, Jennie Elizabeth McMichael, an intrepid Philadelphia girl, whose adventures during the revolutionary period were told at hundreds of firesides by the grandfathers and grandmothers of the present generation.—Buffalo Courier.

CLEAN PAPERS.—Every daily paper one picks up contains one or more accounts of children and young persons led away into crimes or lives of shame by reading the impure and highly sensational literature with which the country seems flooded. There seems to be men in the business so lost to principle and a sense of their responsibility to their fellows and to God, that they, recognizing that the baser elements are in many persons the stronger, pander to,
and feed and inflame them, by this highly sensational literature. The only way this abomination can be removed is by supporting and aiding in circulating, those periodicals that are clean and pure, at the same time denouncing the impure and vicious. Parents, especially, cannot be too careful in selecting the periodicals that come into their homes, for, "as a man thinketh, so is he," and if the family imbibe bad thoughts, wrong ideas and distorted views of life, they will never be better than their ideas.—Farm and Fireside.

A RAILROAD around the world is the thing talked of, or at least something nearly of that nature. It is proposed that a portion of our surplus revenue should be employed in building the line from Oregon to Alaska, and that then the Russian government would be likely to extend the line through Siberia to Peking. This having been done, it requires not much further stretch of the imagination to see, with the mind's eye, the long rails stretching out under the shadows of the Himalayas until they make connection with the proposed line in the Jordan Valley, and thence with the European system.

St. Valentine's Day.

Wednesday, February 14th, was St. Valentine's Day. Of late the sending of valentines has rather fallen off, and the quality of the valentines has been improving. There is now hardly any sale for the cheap, tawdry trash that made up the bulk of the trade in former years. The demand is mainly for the chaste and elegant styles from American and European manufacturers. Magnificent chromo-lithographs, with heavy silk fringes, take the lead. The largely increased facilities for manufacturing the finest styles, caused by the great demand for them, has brought prices down to a much lower standard than formerly.

Valentine's Day, as a social epoch, gives a fresh impetus to the sluggish streams of sentiment, and helps business by putting small change into lively circulation. The missives which, in honor of the tutelary saint of the day, are called valentines, form at this period an important factor in trade. In some departments they seem to take entire possession of the field. The amount of capital invested in this specialty on the coast is stated approximately at $35,000 or $40,000, computing at wholesale prices.

Who St. Valentine was is a matter of small importance. According to some ecclesiastical writers he was a bishop. According to others a presbyter, who was beheaded at Rome by the Emperor Claudius about the year A. D. 270, and was afterward canonized. At all events, he was a man, so writers say, "of admirable parts, and so famous for his love and charity that the custom of choosing valentines on the day of his festival took its rise from thence." Others again claim that it took its rise from the supposed fact that on that day the birds choose their mates. There are other accounts for the origin of the custom, all equally authentic. But the most probable is given in a story that dates somewhere back in the obscurity of legendary times. It is said that a young ecclesiastical of captivating appearance and mien, and, withal, a great flirt, dwelt in a convent situated in a romantic vale of the great Thibetan range. His name was Vladni. Devout though he was, by his blandishments he captured the hearts of all the maidens in the lovely valley of Thar. The young men of the valley tried in vain to win an approving smile from the damsels. Manly beauty, feats of valor and strength, and all the insidious arts that the tender sentiment could invent, were in vain. There was no prospect that a single lay swain would be able to adorn his domestic establishment with a wife. The young men complained to the ecclesiastical authorities, and the result was an edict that Vladni should be placed under restriction.

One day in the year alone—the 14th of February—was allowed him to shed happiness into the hearts of the damsels. All the rest of the year he must apply himself to his devotions. As Vladni could not get around to see all his adoring flock in one day, he took to the method of sending missives to them. When he died he was buried near the foot of a cascade, the waters of which retain to this day the virtue of healing all heart maladies. Good missionaries who afterward went to Thor heard how well-favored the young Buddhist priest was, canonized him by dispensation, and changed his name from Vladni to the more Christian-sounding name of St. Valentine. Vladni is dead, but the 14th of February still embalms his memory, and his custom of sending love missives on that day is perpetuated even throughout Christendom.

A WATCH RUN BY ELECTRICITY.—A German watchmaker has invented a watch to run by electricity, which, it is thought by good judges, will effect a revolution in watchmaking. These watches are without springs, and the works consist of only two wheels. The second hand moves with momentary leaps, like the expensive stop watch. It is also said that the watch can be used for the purposes of telegraphy.

TO RENDER LEATHER IMPERMEABLE TO WATER.—White or yellow wax, first quality, 1,000 parts; Burgundy pitch, 60 parts; oil of arachide, 30; sulphate of iron, 50; essence of thyme, 20 parts. This preparation is recommended by high chemical authority.

The foundry at Leuz, Bavaria, where the statue of Garfield for San Francisco is being cast, is the scene of great activity. The work is being pushed rapidly forward, and an artistically successful result is hoped for.

Home Making in California.

[Written by J. M. K.]

The holidays have come and gone without bringing the long hoped for downpour. No doubt the good cheer was toned down in many homes by anxious thought of the future. Remembering the late rains of last season, people here continued plowing and seeding longer than usual in spite of forbidding signs.

Now, however, nearly all are idle, and the most hopeful are silent about chronic croakers. Throughout the dark days that welcome visitor, the RECORD still comes filled with good cheer. New contributors give us wise and spicy articles, but the heart looks for the old and well-known names, and wonders how they prosper in these times of silence.

It seems presuming and egotistical to write of private hopes and failures, but have we not all found these glimpses of the inner life of others come home to our hearts, stirring their tender feelings with wholesome sympathy? Let this be my apology.

A few days ago we received letters from Shasta county that filled us with surprise, and threw us into a long train of retrospection and reflection. The past year has brought a wonderful degree of prosperity and progress to that part of the country. Vacant lands around Oak Highland being so well taken up, many were too late to secure a home there.

Land that two years ago sold for $1.25 per acre has since been resold for $5. A new school district, to be called Oak Highland, has been created. The direct road to Anderson, positive responsibility. I am happy to believe they will not regret it. During the last year of our stay I answered many letters of inquiry, from Washington Territory to San Diego, generally from persons of very small means. To these I could not give the encouragement I had at first. If the country continues to develop, some of them may regret my course. True, self-interest would have advised to give the bright side only, and cry, "come one, come all," as is so common. But more and more I realized how serious it is to give up the hold one has and set out for the untried.

Then, too, the malaria. Shasta county people seemed so sensitive about letting it be generally known abroad how prevalent malaria really was, I wrote somewhat reservedly about it. Now, however, Shasta county can afford to have all her drawbacks ventilated, as people will live and land go up, though graveyards multiply, where money can be made. In our travels we met and conversed with persons from different parts of the State, and came to the conclusion malaria is more general than many suppose. Do not wince at my plain words, kind reader; they are the wounds of a friend. For chills and fever, floods, drouths and all, we hug her to our hearts, and cry, California forever! Nothing could tempt us to live elsewhere.

After completing our time, having spent considerable in experiments which, although sometimes giving strong hints of future success, under slightly different conditions, had yielded no returns, we rented our farm upon the river. The overflow of 1881 rendered it more than usually unhealthy, and our experience here is never to be forgotten. Four little ones, pass-give place to the glow of the morning. Oh, grand and beautiful the philosophy that sees in all things a compensation! Sweet the steadfast faith that never questions, never doubts, but believes all things work together for good. Tracy, January 16th.

The Way Mother Did.

"I wish," remarked Mr. Blinks, in a querulous tone, "that you would learn to do things the way mother did. Now these tea cakes are not sweet enough; they have a little too much spice, and besides are a little mite heavy. Now my mother always—"

Mr. Blinks," asked Mrs. B., with a dangerous light in her eyes, what did your mother used to do when you used to come home from school and grumble at everything after she had slaved herself nearly to death all day trying to get things in some sort of shape for supper?" "The—she—boxed my ears," murmured Mr. B.

"I shall endeavor to do things as your mother did," said Mrs. B., quietly.

Mr. B. concluded that the cakes were pretty good.—Philadelphia Call.

A Northern Scene.

The recent snowfall reminding us of the Northern regions and also the recent Congressional action in regard to a government for Alaska bring to mind that a peep at the Northern regions will not be malapropos for this issue.

The picture on this page gives the characteristic aspects of many locations at the north. In some places the mountains are well wooded and the majestic forests reach quite to the water's edge. In others there are the bleak, bare mountains, and only low, scrubby growths in the lower lands at their feet. Even in such places the pioneer settlements are made to foster some industry which is called for by the material resources of the neighborhood, or for the purpose of trade with more hospitable or richer regions at a distance from the navigable water. In such places, too, are sometimes planted the outposts of the church, where devoted men labor for the elevation and evangelization of the outrunners of civilization or of the aboriginal inhabitants.

By contemplation of the close and fever-bearing conditions of the tropics, or the severe and chilling features of the extreme north, one becomes all the more convinced that comfort and prosperity rest in the middle grounds, and that the temperate zone is the choicest habitation for mankind. While many may go in pursuit of fortune to either the northern or southern limits of the coast, those, as a rule, do best who are content to dwell and labor nearer the centers of civilization and enjoy the benefits of nearness to their fellow men. However, there is honor for the venturesome, and their services to the public in the development of the grand resources of our wide continent are well known. There is still field for their labors, and success to those who work best for it.

EXPERIMENTS CONFIRMATORY OF THE VOLCANIC THEORY OF THE TWILIGHT GLOW.—According to the Philadelphia Record Mr. Joseph Wharton of that city believes that he has confirmed, by ocular demonstration and experiment, the truth of his theory that the recent splendid twilight glows resulted from volcanic dust thrown out by the Javan eruptions. On Sunday morning last, while the snow was yet falling, Mr. Wharton states he took a gallon of it from the clean surface, a quarter of a mile or more from the nearest leeward building, and 100 yards to windward of his residence. That snow, melted under cover in the porcelain vessel in which it was gathered, showed at first no sediment; but, after a time, and aided by a gentle rotatory movement which brought all to the deepest point, a slight deposit appeared. By pouring off most of the water and evaporating the remainder a little dry dust was obtained, which, even to the naked eye, showed, in the sunlight, tiny vitreous reflections.

The dust, Mr. Wharton says, showed, under the microscope, the characteristics of volcanic glass, partly in irregular, flat fragments and partly in filaments. Under a knife edge the filaments broke easily and cleanly. The irregular fragments were of various sizes and shapes, mostly transparent, but, even when examined by strong transmitted light, showing no trace of crystalline structure.

which my husband surveyed but was unable to open alone, is now in use, while the stage brings a daily mail. The selling of the railroad land at so low a figure gave a wonderful impetus to the settling up of the country. The farms now joining in an unbroken chain, and some of the owners persons of wealth, they are uniting for the purpose of bringing the water upon their land. The wonderful growth of Anderson, which we are told has doubled the past year, and the general development of the country, make the earning of a living on the highlands now a comparatively easy task, where five years ago any one without means was forced to work the greater part of their time on the malarious lowlands.

Five years ago. Memory will often look back, sometimes with a tinge of sadness, to those red letter days. We claim the honor of being the first family on the ground, although but twenty-four hours later, through a drizzling rain, came the second. Oh, the glory of the hills and mountains, and the wild solitudes of nature; the fragrant breath of pine and mountain herb; the strong courage and hope for the future.

Here we toiled and hoped two years (our required time), filling both the letter and spirit of the law.

A tinge of sadness in those memories, did I say? This should not be. One happy day can never possibly be more than one day. Each day brings its own joy or sorrow; and to linger or return to the places we have experienced delight will never give back the past, while the memory may breathe a sweet perfume down the years to come. It is truly gratifying to see so good a promise of my first hopes for this beautiful country being realized. My rose-colored pictures induced several families to come in, and for the future prosperity of these I felt a ing daily through the various stages of chills and fever, and our strong, brave, bread winner reduced to feebleness and despondency, then came the question, what next? True, the highlands had been quite exempt, but, with irrigation, would they always be?

How often we find ourselves halting where two paths divide. We realize that one may lead on to fortune, the other to disappointment and poverty. In this problem are factors known only to ourselves. The clearest vision may not read the secrets of the future.

On this decision hangs far more than financial interests. In one path may lurk a danger, to take from our side a loved one, or some influence to work for the ruin of another. Must not every one who realizes the responsibility of the movement look upward with a cry for light, believing "there's a divinity that shapes our ends rough, hew them as we will?" When the dim future becomes the clear past, and we find our way grow steep and stony, while that other lying far away looks smooth and green, shall we sigh that we have taken the wrong road? What fortune any other road would have brought probably in this or any other world we shall never know.

Here we have found health and courage. The children are bright and rosy. The father has gained more than 20 pounds of flesh, and been able to work in the harvest field with younger men. The baby, who so many months lingered at death's door, is so hearty you would not know him. Have we not life's richest gifts? And shall we not still take the future with confidence, even though we suffer the darkly threatened second year of utter failure!

Let no one despair in a country of such grand possibilities—where, having failed and lost again and again, fortune still knocks at the door, and the shades of night can so quickly

RECORDER'S WORK.—It has become a well attested fact that the Recorder and Financier of the several Lodges fill the most important positions in the Lodge room. We have recently had the pleasure of inspecting the books kept by Brother W. S. Reynolds who has been Recorder of Spartan Lodge for the last four years. His books and accessories are as complete and well kept as any we have ever seen. We suggest that Recorders of numerous other Lodges would do well to inspect them and receive a valuable lesson.

DISBANDED.—Princeton Lodge, No. 201, of Princeton, Colusa county, has disbanded. Most of the members have taken Grand Lodge cards, and will join some of the other Workmen Lodges in the county, of which Colusa has quite a number.

FRATERNITY.

First Original Prize Poem.

[By SAM BOOTH, San Francisco.]

I sing of Human Brotherhood, the sentiment divine
That views a brother mortal's ills as if those ills were mine;
That of the good or ill of life will either lend or borrow,
And with his neighbor share his joy or share his neighbor's sorrow.

Alas! that man from Eden's ways so soon should step aside—
That the first-born of all mankind should be a fratricide.
Alas! through all the centuries that man with man was striving
In endless feuds and bloody war instead of peace contriving.

From age to age, in every land, man's history has stood
A chronicle of human woe, writ in fraternal blood;
Nation 'gainst nation, man 'gainst man, through all its crimson pages,
In deadly enmity arrayed—the story of the ages.

But through the cruel centuries were prophets, bards and seers
Who caught a glimpse of better days amid the darkling years,
When mighty men of hand and brain should use their God-like power
To elevate the weak and poor, and not to crush him lower—

When men should grasp each other's hands, and seek each other's good,
And join themselves in loyal bands of Knightly Brotherhood—
When woman should at last be free from her enthralled subjection,
And stand upon an equal plane of Mutual Protection.

Hail we the happy days for which the ancient bards did pray,
That usher in the gospel of the New Fraternity;
That teaches men the blessedness of loving and forgiving,
And in the place of war and death gives peace and joyful living.

Hail to the men of every guild—"Mason," "Odd Fellow," "Friend,"
"Red Man," "Forester," "Workman," "Knight," in whom thy virtues blend;
Who see in earth's most lowly child a sister or a brother,
And recognize that "love of God" is "love for one another."

Fraternity! Fraternity! What human tongue or pen
Can estimate the great "good will" which thou hast brought to men—
What joy and comfort thou hast brought unto the poor and sighing,
What unrecorded ministries unto the sick and dying!

Ah! not till the last trump proclaims that time shall cease to be
Will it be known in earth or heaven how much we owe to thee.
Then, when the books are opened and the angels tell the story,
Heaven's vaults shall echo to the song that celebrates thy glory.

Affairs in Iowa.

As foreshadowed in our last issue, the rebellious faction of whilom Workmen in Iowa announce their intention of holding out to the last extremity. The general opinion in regard to the final result, however, is that expressed by Supreme Recorder Sackett in another column. The seceders have issued a circular addressed to their membership, which still breathes forth defiance and counsels firmness in their position. The circular bears the rather ominous heading, Waterloo, the place where the trial was held. There is but little doubt that it will prove a veritable Waterloo to the defendants.

During the several years that the seceders have assumed independence, they have decreased rather than increased numerically, and are consequently not as strong as they were the day they seceded. During this month both Grand Lodges have been in session. In lieu of any reports that have yet reached us of these bodies, we will give our readers some interesting extracts from Iowa papers showing how the affair is regarded there by the people at large. The Cedar Falls Journal of January 31st has an editorial from which the following is taken:

The legal contest just closed by a verdict for the plaintiffs, between two bodies both claiming to be the Grand Lodge of Iowa, presents many features of interest to all persons connected, or in any manner related to voluntary associations or societies, namely: Masons, Odd Fellows, churches, etc. Historically this case evidences manipulation purely selfish and divorced from every fraternal feature.

It then goes on to recount the history of the case with which the readers of the WATCHMAN are doubtless familiar, on account of our frequent references to it heretofore. With the immediate affairs of the final trial, however, they are probably not so familiar, and we again refer to the Journal for the following resume:

Early in 1883 proceedings in quo warranto were commenced in this district, but subsequently changed to this circuit, the officers of the reorganized Grand Lodge being the relators or plaintiffs, and those of the defunct Grand Lodge being made defendants.

After three attempts to bring the case to trial the case was called this time, but not without the usual motion, on the part of defendants, for a continuance. As the case presented nothing but points of law, the plaintiffs had early sought to gain the consent of the defendants to waive a jury but were always refused. The trial dragged its weary length along from the 15th to the 26th. The testimony was all in, and on behalf of the plaintiffs Judge Rodgers, speaking eight hours, had presented his argument; he, at the outset, informing the jury that he had nothing for their consideration and directed his address to the Court, and in closing, gave notice that at the proper time he should present to the Court a motion that the jury be instructed to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff.

The defendants, before presenting any evidence in defence, introduced a motion requesting the court to instruct the jury to bring in a verdict for defendants. To this motion plaintiffs presented no objection provided the defendants now submitted their case, but if defendants insisted on trying their case, should motion be over-ruled, the plaintiffs did object. The defendants not consenting thereto and the court over-ruling the motion, defendants proceeded to introduce testimony in defence.

Following Judge Rodgers, Mr. J. D. Nichols, for defendants, argued purely points of law to the court, the address lasting about four hours. He was followed, also in behalf of defendants, by Mr. Boise, who also had no use for a jury, and for six hours argued legal points for the ear of the court. He was succeeded by H. B. Fouke, also for defendants, speaking for two hours during the morning session. When the hour of adjournment came the court inquired of Mr. Fouke if he had anything to present to the jury, and he was likewise compelled to say no. Evidently neither side had need of a jury. Resuming in the afternoon, Mr. Fouke addressed the court for two hours more, when the court stopped further remarks and on presentation of plaintiffs' motion granted it, and, as prayed, instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiffs; Mr. Lane, for plaintiffs, not being permitted to speak in their behalf.

We are thus particular in giving the details of the trial because it is claimed by the defeated party that they were cut off without a chance to be heard, when the facts are that plaintiffs occupied, in argument, but eight hours and defendants fourteen. The case turned purely on the points, "is the A. O. U. W. a fraternity or a legal corporation?" the plaintiffs standing on fraternal grounds and defendants on corporate rights.

Thus ends the first lesson. We understand that defendants will appeal.

The Dubuque Times carefully reviews the matter editorially, and closes as follows:

This action was brought by the Grand Lodge recognized by the Supreme Lodge against the old, and seceding Grand Lodge to recover the rights and franchises of the Grand Lodge of the Order in Iowa, no property right being in issue, and after eleven days trial before Judge Utt, he instructed the jury to bring in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, on the ground that the charters, rules, regulations and other acts of incorporations not organized for pecuniary profits, such as religious societies, Odd Fellows, Masons, etc., are binding upon such societies and their members, where no property interests or other valuable civil rights have been or will be affected by their action, and therefore the act of the Supreme body in taking away the charter of the State Lodge, and in granting another could not be interfered with by the courts; that it was purely a question to be determined by the Supreme Lodge, into which the courts could not inquire, and there was, therefore, no question to be determined by the jury.

When Judge Utt's decision comes to be carefully considered, without prejudice and partizanship, it will be found to rest upon solid foundation of law and equity. It is a decision of great moment to all secret societies, and social and church organizations. Without the establishment of the principle which Judge Utt's decision asserts, all such voluntary organizations would stand upon exceedingly insecure foundation.

Semi-Annual Report of the Relief Committee Officers.

We have received advance sheets of the second semi-annual report of the officers of the A. O. U. W. Relief Committee of this city, the officers of which are as follows: Harry J. Lask, President; C. C. Gilmore, Vice-President, and C. W. Nevin, Treasurer.

The President commences his report by congratulating the Committee on a home and headquarters of their own, alluding to the many advantages accruing therefrom; cites numerous cases where work and situations have been obtained for worthy brothers in need of them; refers at length to the Committee's efforts in behalf of C. F. Deo, and tenders thanks to Dr. L. C. Lane for his generous and charitable attitude in connection therewith; returns thanks to the Committee on Celebration of District No. 1, of this city, who donated to the Relief Committee the proceeds of their Thanksgiving entertainment; returns thanks to the C. P. R. R. and P. C. S. S. Co's. for favors granted; and thanks the Grand Officers and membership at large for their good will and assistance thus far given.

Other portions of the report as follows, we quote verbatim:

I call upon the members at large, in this city, to help in obtaining employment for those seeking it; and to this end we send out to every Lodge in this city, fortnightly, a list of those applying for positions, giving residence, Lodge and nature of employment sought, with a further appeal to members of the Lodge in which it is read, to help us procure work for the applicant, if it is in their power to do so.

In the matter of aid, we have paid considerable money to those in need and in destitute circumstances. We have been careful, before granting appeals for money, to investigate each case, and I believe that all of the applications attended during the past term have been worthy, and entitled to our help. We have in a number of instances aided those who were really suffering for a piece of bread for themselves and children, as also for wood and coal, and we have felt repaid for our action by seeing the parties once more above want, and by their thanks and good wishes.

I desire to express the thanks of the Committee to the many kind and generous Brothers of the Order, and those not members, for favors received in furnishing the rooms. Without their generosity, the Committee would have been put to considerable expense. Also to the proprietors of all the daily morning papers published in this city, as well as to that well-edited and able exponent of the principles of our Order, the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, for kindly notices and free copies of each edition furnished for the use of those visiting our rooms. Many visit us to gain the news and enjoy a passing hour reading the articles contained in that disseminator of knowledge and enlightenment, the "Press."

I am happy to state that for the first time in the annals of our Committee, every Lodge in this city is now represented on the Committee, making the full Committee of twenty-three. We are working in harmony, and it continues with the best assurance from each Lodge in the District.

In order that all may know the extent of our expenses and how they are met, I will give a brief summary: The Secretary of the Committee is paid at the rate of $5 per month; our rooms cost $18, with janitor hire of $2.50, making, with the Secretary's salary, a total of $25.50. This is our entire outlay, excepting such as advertising, printing, postage and stationery requisite for the proper conduct of our business. To meet this, 19 Lodges in the city contribute $1 a month toward the support of the rooms, leaving a deficit of $6.50 a month. I therefore call attention to the economy with which the Committee business is transacted.

I sincerely trust that at the forthcoming session of our Grand Lodge some provision will be made whereby we can obtain a stipulated sum for our work during each year, thereby saving the city Lodges from bearing the expense, through which they gain very little, as less than ten per cent of all applications for employment come from them. A per capita tax of 10 cents on the membership of our Jurisdiction would amply suffice, and probably by judicious and careful management leave a surplus at the end of the year; and it might not be necessary to levy the tax more than once in two years. I most respectfully call the attention of our Representatives to the Grand Lodge to this very important matter.

From the report of the Secretary we make the following extracts concerning matters not covered by the foregoing:

We have had applications for assistance and employment from 39 Lodges in California—also from Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, Michigan, Washington Territory, Illinois, New York and Texas, and many have received permanent situations.

On July 18th the Committee was called together to perform the last sad rites over the remains of Brother N. Nathan, of Multnomah Lodge, No. 48, Portland, Oregon.

We have mailed 597 letters, reports and postal cards, and received letters from all parts of the Union.

I think great credit due to our worthy President (Brother H. J. Lask) for his untiring effort to make this term a notable one. From personal knowledge I know he has worked night and day, and for the good of the Order.

From the Treasurer's report we take the following recapitulation:

Amount on hand beginning of term.....$ 631 57
Amount received during term.....410 15

Total.....$1,041 72
Amount disbursed during term.....735 15

Balance cash on hand.....$ 306 57

By glancing through the items of the Treasurer's report we find that the total disbursement of $735.15, as given above, may be classified as follows: Expended for relief, $257.05; paid bills from last term's picnic, $150. (This picnic it will be remembered brought in some $800 to the Committee.) Paid on expense account (including cost of fitting up entire, new headquarters), $328.10.

Addenda to the reports have also been issued in the shape of correspondence of interest received during the past term, consisting of letters of good will from Grand Officers and other prominent Workmen, and also from the recipients of the Committee's bounty, all of which throw much light upon the methods and workings of the Committee. Taken altogether, the reports make a very favorable showing for the past term's work.

BROTHER CHRIS WALLER, the veteran Receiver of Valley, had his money box tapped in his grocery store a few nights since, by a burglar. We are glad to learn that through the efforts of detectives the culprit was found and most of the money restored.

WE would call especial attention to the synopsis on another page of the address of the Grand Master Workman, delivered during his southern tour.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

IN a former issue of the WATCHMAN the types made me say that suspensions should be reported as occurring on the 27th of the month. It was written 29th. A member has until the end of the 28th day of the month in which to pay his assessments, so that all suspensions should be reported as occurring on the 29th, except when February has but 28 days, in which case the February assessment becomes delinquent on March 1st. "The day after the 28th" is the language of the law.

It's a bad sign when a Lodge asks the Grand Master to be allowed to meet semi-monthly. In nine cases out of ten the Lodge is on the decline, and the remedy they ask for is a poison instead of a panacea.

SOME 25 Lodges have not yet sent in their grand annual reports. They are needed badly.

We also received as a contributed fund for J. J. Upchurch, $1,010.95. This amount did not go on our books, it being a private matter, and it was remitted to Brother Upchurch by the Grand Recorder.

WE recently met Brother D. Brownstone, P. M. W., of Lone Sycamore, No. 163, of Lemoore, Tulare county. From him we learn, using his own words, that "We are increasing at the rate of three a month, and have one of the nicest Lodges in the State as to quality of membership and have 44 in number. The heavy rains have given us good prospects and no doubt will increase our membership."

DEPUTY LEMONT, of District No. 4, will hold an open District meeting sometime in March. Due notice will be given of the time and place and an invitation given to all, whether members or not, with their families.

THE following extract from a private letter from Supreme Recorder Sackett, gives some views in regard to the Iowa matter that will be very interesting to the Order in general. "We feel very happy in our complete victory in Iowa. It was a hard fought battle, contested inch by inch. We have no fear as to the result before the Supreme Court of Iowa. We were only afraid of the lower Court. The moral effect will be greatly to the advantage of the loyal Brotherhood in Iowa."

Relief Call No. 4.

OFFICE OF SUPREME MASTER
WORKMAN, A. O. U. W.,
OAKLAND, CAL., Feb. 5, 1884.

To the Ancient Order of United Workmen:—At a meeting of the Supreme Lodge Relief Board, held at Meadville, Pa., February 1, 1884, the application of the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction for relief under the provisions of Article IX of the Beneficiary Laws of the Order was fully considered; and the undersigned Relief Board do hereby certify to the correctness of the following statements of facts as ascertained by a personal examination of the books and records, viz:

First—That during the fiscal year ending March 1, 1884, the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction has levied and collected twenty-four (24) assessments (its full maximum as required by law), from which ninety-nine (99) death losses were paid, and that after the settlement of the above losses there still remain twenty-seven (27) death losses unpaid, requiring the sum of fifty-four thousand ($54,000) dollars.

Second—That in addition to the payment of the above death losses, there have been paid ten (10) death losses of the fiscal year 1882-83, for which relief was granted as set forth in Relief Call No. 3.

Third—Attached hereto is a summary of the receipts and disbursements of the Beneficiary Fund of the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction for the fiscal year 1883-84, and also Death Register for same. (Series 1883-84.)

To provide the sum for relief as above mentioned, viz: Fifty-four thousand ($54,000) dollars, the Supreme Lodge Relief Board do hereby call upon the various Grand Master Workmen, and upon the Master Workman presiding over the various Subordinate Lodges under the immediate Jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge, for the amount of one assessment of forty-five (45) cents on each Master Workman degree member—the same to be collected and forwarded as provided in Sec. 2, Art. IX, Supreme Lodge Constitution.

The Supreme Lodge Relief Board desire to call especial attention to Sec. 2, Art. IX, Supreme Lodge Constitution, as follows:

SEC. 2.—"The Relief Fund shall be raised by levying assessments of amounts not more than sufficient to produce the amount required for the payment of each respective relief assessment; and such assessments shall be levied and collected in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as ordinary assessments for the Beneficiary Fund, and all laws of the Order in regard to suspension for non-payment of ordinary assessments or reinstatement of members shall be applicable also to such relief assessments. All Master Workmen degree members in good standing at the date of the levy of such assessment shall be liable for the same. Provided, Subordinate Lodges may set apart such Relief Fund or assessment from their General Fund, and that such assessments shall not exceed the sum of three dollars per member in any one year."

Subordinate Lodges will forward calls upon the Relief Fund through the same channel and in the same manner as Beneficiary moneys are forwarded.

The Grand Recorder of each Grand Jurisdiction will make report to the Supreme Recorder, not later than the 20th day of April, 1884, giving the name, number, location and the amount paid by each Subordinate Lodge in the Jurisdiction, and will forward with said report, by draft or postoffice money order, payable to the order of the Supreme Receiver, for the amount due as shown by the report.

Each Grand Recorder will also report all Subordinate Lodges that have failed to forward their proportion of the Relief Fund as per the call made.

Respectfully submitted in C. H. and P., M. E. BEEBE, S. F. (acting S. M. W.), Chairman.

M. W. SACKETT, S. Rdr., Secretary.

Financial Summary for the Year.

The following is the summary of receipts and disbursements of the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction for the fiscal year 1883-4. The lengthy death register is omitted from this column as not being of sufficient interest to the Order at large to warrant its publication here:

RECEIPTS.

Balance in hands Supreme Receiver, March 1, 1883.....$656 86

Receipts from March 1, 1883 to February 1, 1884, Relief Fund.....18,977 25
Total.....$218,049 16

As the full number of assessments, viz.: 24, have been levied and collected, the receipts from February 1st to March 1, 1884, the end of the fiscal year, can only be such small amounts as may be levied for arrears and will not materially change these figures.

DISBURSEMENTS.

Paid 99 death losses for the year 1883-4. 198,000 00

Total.....$218,049 16

WE are pleased to note the zeal with which Grand Lecturer E. M. Reading commenced, and still continues, his practical work among the Lodges. Scarcely a week passes but what he officially visits several Lodges in San Francisco or vicinity, and whenever his duties permit, also takes a run into the interior counties to look after the work there. This comprehension and execution of the duties of his office are commendable in a high degree, and cannot but redound to the good of the Order.

The Remorseful Cakes.

A little boy named Thomas, ate
Hot buckwheat cakes for tea—
A very much proceeding, as We presently shall see.

He went to bed at eight o'clock,
As all good children do,
But scarce had closed his little eyes,
When he most restless grew.

He flopped on this side, then on that,
Then keeled up on his head,
And covered, all at once, each spot
Of his wee trundle-bed.

He wrapped one leg around his waist,
And 'tother round his ear,
While mamma wondered what on earth
Could ail her little dear.

But sound asleep, and as he slept
He dreamt an awful dream
Of being spanked with hickory slabs
Without the power to scream.

He dreamt a great big lion came
And ripped and raved and roared—
While, on his breast, two furious bulls
In mortal combat gored.

He dreamt he heard the flop of wings
Within the chimney flue—
And down they crawled, to know his ears,
An awful bugaboo!

When Thomas rose next morn, his face
Was palled as a sheet—
"I never more," he firmly said,
"Will cakes for supper eat!"

A Moonlight Story.

Did you ever hear what a queer thing happened in Jack Huntley's school-room once?

Jack is a little boy about ten years old, with a freckled nose, and big brown eyes, and a great dimple in his cheek when he laughs. And he laughs most all the time. He laughed so much in school one day that Miss Fannie said, all of a sudden, in the midst of the spelling lesson:

"Jack, you may sit in the closet."

He got very red in the face then, and he didn't want to go one bit, but he knew he had to, so off he marched, and sat down on the little stool which was kept in the closet for roguish boys. There was a window in this closet, high up. Jack couldn't see out of it, but the sun shone in, and now and then a sweet breeze blew in and made Jack think of the great red clover-heads out in the meadow, and the bees and butterflies. But pretty soon he forgot about them. The long lashes drooped over the merry eyes, and he was fast asleep.

Just about this time one of the trustees came into the school-room, and stayed until the children went home. Then Miss Fannie put on her hat and went off with him, and forgot all about the naughty little chap in the closet.

When Jack woke up it was very still. He looked up at the window, and there was the moon, round and yellow, peeping down at him, and seeming to say:

"Heigho, Master Jack, why are you not in your bed this time of the night?"

Jack rubbed his eyes, and couldn't think where he was for a minute. It didn't take him long to push open the closet door, and what do you suppose he saw then? There, at Miss Fannie's desk, sat the clock, with the pointer in its hands, teaching the sounds of the letters to the queerest looking row of scholars you ever heard of.

First was the waste-basket, as big and round as could be. Then the water-pitcher and the duster, and, in the lowest desks, the erasers and tin cups. Down the middle row he spied the numeral frame and call-bell and thermometer and quart cup and scud-stick and the dictionary and ever so many slates.

While he stood there, with his eyes and mouth wide open with astonishment, the clock rapped on the floor with the pointer.

"I hear somebody laughing," it said in a precise voice, "Jack Huntley, you may sit in the closet."

Jack fairly jumped, but he soon saw that it did not mean him, but the quart cup, which sat on his desk. That at once hopped down on the floor, and came thumping along towards him as he stood in the closet doorway. He stepped aside to let it pass, and they all saw him in the clear moonlight. Then, in a twinkling, what a commotion there was! They all came rushing at poor Jack, pell-mell. He heard them cry:

"A boy! A boy! A boy!"

"A boy that ought to be in bed!"

"A boy trying to pry into our secrets!"

"A boy who stopped the clock one day!"

"A boy who cracked the pitcher one day!"

"A boy who broke his slate one day!"

"A boy who hid the bell one day!"

"A boy who made faces at Miss Fannie one day!"

"O! O! O! A boy! A boy!"

"Let's make him stand on his head!"

"Oh! hobbin, bobbin' let's make him spin thread!"

He felt them climbing all over him, and pushing him this way and that till he hardly knew what was going to happen next. He was frightened enough to scream out, but he didn't want to be a baby; besides, he thought if he watched his chance, he might jump away from them. All at once there came a great knock at the door. Call bell gave a soft little peal, and away they all flew to their places where they were kept every day, and the queer school was gone.

Jack opened the door, and there stood his big brother Tom, who had been looking for him everywhere, until he happened to meet Miss Fannie, who told him that she had locked him in the schoolhouse.

Jack had funny dreams that night, and the next day when he was in school again he couldn't quite make out whether or not he had dreamed of the strange thing which had happened to him. But he didn't stop the clock any more, nor crack the pitcher, nor break his slate, nor hide the call bell, nor make faces at Miss Fannie. —Selected.

Ten Little Toes.

Baby is clad in his nightgown white,
Pussy cat purrs a soft good-night,
And somebody tells, for somebody knows,
The terrible tale of ten little toes.

RIGHT FOOT.

This big toe took a small boy Sam,
Into the cupboard after jam;
This little toe said, "Oh, no! no!"
This little toe was anxious to go;
This little toe said, "Tisn't quite right,"
This little tiny toe curled out of sight.

LEFT FOOT.

This big toe got suddenly stubbed;
This little toe got ruefully rubbed;
This little frightened toe cried out, "Bears!"
This little timid toe, "Run up stairs!"
Down came a jar with a loud slam, slam!
This little tiny toe got all the jam.

WOOD IN SURGERY.—Wood is employed scientifically in surgery in a different form from ordinary splints. A foreigner has introduced wood-wool as a cheap and useful dressing for wounds, and it is being prepared extensively as a commercial staple for surgical dressings. It is finely ground wood, such as is extensively used in the manufacture of paper. It is a clean looking, delicate-fibered, soft, yellowish-white substance, having an odor of fresh wood, and absorbs an immense quantity of liquid. The best wood-wool was found to be that which was obtained from the Pinus picea. The wood-wool thus procured was first pressed, passed through a sieve, then dried and impregnated with a solution containing  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of sublimate and 10 per cent of glycerine. The advantages claimed for this dressing are numerous. It is cleanly, fresh, and of a whitish color; it is at the same time soft and delicate in texture as cotton, and "extraordinarily cheap." The actual price is, however, not stated. It possesses some antiseptic properties naturally, has an agreeable odor, and is exceedingly elastic even in thin layers, so that bandages can be put on more lightly with this than with any other dressing. Its absorbent properties are so high that it takes up 12 times its own weight of water, so that 10 ounces of well dried wood-wool after complete saturation attain a weight of 120 ounces.

Health Column.

Health in the Shop.

It is profitable for proprietors to make their shops and factories healthy and pleasant for their workmen. This topic is ably discussed by the Industrial World:

Some of the best things to be seen at the modern shops are the conveniences for the personal cleanliness and comfort of the men employed, and from the few thus equipped the most useful lessons may be learned by those still content to run in the rut of unfortunate indifference which has so long prevailed.

The placing of such things as water-closets in the centre or at one side of a large shop apartment is a step in the right direction, not only in making sure that the enclosure will be kept in the best possible condition; but also that there shall be the least possible time lost in it. Both of these considerations have a real money value, and the better chance of thus maintaining the sharpest watch over them both while attending to other current duties, relieves foremen or managers from some needless sources of annoyance.

It was long ago proposed to use for washing fixtures in machine-shops, and other places where they must be provided, along pipe of suitable size with a small thumb pet-cock on the under side of it for each man, but this very convenient arrangement has been by far too rarely used. A sink or trough of moderate size is needed to catch and lead away the water falling from the hands, and the whole is found to be of the most reasonable cost in furnishing and in the amount of water consumed. Of the ease with which such a water supply could be heated in the supply-pipe itself, and of the importance that each man should have clean water for his own use, mention need hardly be made.

It has but seldom been found by those who keep close watch of the effect of such improvements that they do not pay handsomely for themselves. Their influence is by no means so indirect or so uncertain as has sometimes been supposed.

Dandruff and Loss of Hair.

Dandruff is a condition in which branny scales are shed from the scalp in great abundance. It may be due to eczema or pityriasis, or may result from a disorder of the sebaceous glands, and from acne. The latter is the most common cause of the disease. In this form of affection, the abnormal secretion of the fat glands appears upon the scalp as yellowish scales. This condition is sometimes present upon the nose and cheeks as well as the scalp. It is often a very annoying complaint. When affecting the scalp, it sooner or later results in loss of the hair. This is not because the dandruff destroys the hair, but because the same disease which causes the dandruff interferes with the nutrition of the hair, thus occasioning its loss. On account of its tendency to produce baldness, the disease should never be neglected. Dandruff is most generally occasioned by disorder of the digestion, or some other debilitating disease.

Treatment.—Restore the general health by proper attention to the digestion and hygiene. For dandruff of the face, apply the same remedies recommended for the skin. The scalp should be treated in the same way, by gentle shampooing with ordinary washing soap, once or twice a week. A very soft brush should be used. Neither a stiff brush nor a fine comb should ever be used for removing dandruff. For shampooing, a liniment composed of equal parts of castor-oil and alcohol may be rubbed on the scalp, or an ointment composed of a dram of tannin to an ounce of vaseline.—Health.

GERMAN TREATMENT OF DIPHTHERIA.—The new German remedy for diphtheria—turpentine—appears to find many advocates. Children take one teaspoonful morning and evening, adults a tablespoonful; in children, tepid milk is given after it, and it might also be mixed with the same. Half an hour after the administration of the drug, a bright redness begins to spread from the margin of the diphtheritic exudation, and this redness becomes generally diffused over and takes the place of the false membrane, and the disease is said to disappear within twenty-four hours without leaving the slightest trace. While this remarkable effect is said to be invariably met with when the remedy is made use of at the very commencement of the disease, those who recommend it so highly assert that it is also successful, only less rapidly, in cases that have progressed for several days.

HOT WATER FOR TORPID LIVERS.—Two Polish physicians have been making experiments for the purpose of ascertaining the effects upon the liver of alkaline mineral waters. Their results indicate that alkaline waters increase the quantity of bile when taken freely. These experiments also included observations upon the effects of hot water upon the liver, the conclusion being that hot water possesses the same properties as alkaline waters. We have proved in a large number of cases that the use of hot water is one of the most effective means of encouraging a torpid liver. When the liver is torpid, there is usually a red sediment in the urine. From six to eight glasses of hot water should be taken daily until the sediment disappears.

Household Hints.

Recipes.

[Written by ADA E. TAYLOR.]

Mock Mince Pies.—Six crackers, two cups of hot water, one cup of syrup, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one cup of vinegar, three medium sized apples chopped fine, one cup of chopped raisins, a little citron, and a little wine or brandy; spice to taste.

Orange Float.—Mix with one quart of water the juice and pulp of two lemons, one coffee-cup of sugar; boil sufficiently to dissolve the sugar, strain and again bring to a boil; add four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch mixed in a little cold water. Stir and boil fifteen minutes; when cool pour over four or five sliced oranges, thickly sprinkled with white sugar. Beat to a stiff froth the whites of three eggs; add some white sugar and a little vanilla, spread over the top. Baked with cream.

Orange Pudding.—Peel and cut five oranges into thin slices, taking out the seeds; put over them a large cup of fine white sugar. Let a pint of milk come to boiling by setting in hot water; add yolks of three eggs, well beaten; one tablespoonful of cornstarch, made smooth in a little cold milk; stir all the time, and as soon as thickened pour it on the fruit. Beat the whites to a stiff froth; add a tablespoonful of sugar, and spread it over the top. Set in the oven to harden. Eaten hot or cold, but much nicer cold.

Tapioca Cream.—Soak over night one cup of tapioca in a cup of water; in the morning add a pint of milk; salt it, and let it boil ten minutes. Beat up the yolks of two eggs with a half cup of sugar; add it, and boil fifteen minutes. Flavor with lemon, and have ready the whites of two eggs, beaten light, and a little sugar added, to spread upon the top.

COOKING AN OSTRICH EGG.—"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten," said Dwight Whiting, counting the guests he had invited to spend the day at the ostrich farm with him. "I guess one egg will be enough," and having given utterance to this singular expression he wended his way to the paddock and soon brought to the house an egg which a female ostrich had courteously laid for the occasion.

*** The triumph of the feast was the ostrich egg. For a whole hour it was boiled, and although there were some misgivings that another half hour's boiling would have improved it, hunger and curiosity could not longer be restrained. The shell was broken, and it may readily be believed that as the three-pound hard-boiled egg lay upon the plate it was an object of interest from its very novelty. But aside from its size there was nothing peculiar about it. The white had the bluish tinge seen in duck eggs, and the yolk was of the usual color. It tasted like it looked—like a duck egg—and had no flavor peculiar to itself. But it was immense! As it takes twenty-eight hen eggs to equal in weight the ostrich egg which was cooked, it was evident that the host knew what he was about in cooking only one. There was enough and to spare; and before leaving the table the party unanimously resolved, that having partaken of ostrich egg, we pronounce it good.—Anaheim Gazette.

FISH IN WHITE SAUCE.—Flake up cold, boiled halibut and set the plate into the steamer that the fish may heat without drying. Boil the bones and skin of the fish with a slice of onion and a very small piece of red pepper; a bit of this the size of a kernel of coffee will make the sauce quite as hot as most persons like it. Boil this stock down to half a pint; thicken with one teaspoonful of butter and one teaspoonful of flour, mixed together. Add one drop of extract of almond. Pour this sauce over the halibut and stick bits of parsley over it.

STEWED CABBAGE.—Shred two small cabbages, coarser than for cold slaw; parboil them with a small piece of red pepper added to the boiling water; then pour off the water and add three or four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a small piece of butter and a large-sized ladleful of stock from the stock-pot; cover the saucepan closely, and let the cabbage simmer gently for half an hour; season with a little red pepper, if it needs more, and salt.

CHICKEN SOUP.—A delicious chicken soup is made by cutting up one chicken and putting it in the kettle with nearly two quarts of water, a teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper. When about half done, add two tablespoonfuls of barley or of rice. When this is done remove the chicken from the soup, tear or cut part of the breast into small pieces and add to the soup with a cup of cream.

TOMATO AND ONION OMELET.—Take equal parts of sliced onions and tomatoes, peeled and freed from seeds, chop them both coarsely. Fry the onions in butter. When cooked, without being colored, add the tomatoes, with pepper and salt, and stir the mixture on the fire. Make a plain omelet in the usual way, and insert this in the fold on dishing it.

PUMPKIN PIE WITHOUT EGGS.—A pumpkin pie without eggs may be easily made. Beat a cup of molasses with each pint of pumpkin, and also a tablespoonful of melted butter and half a teaspoonful of soda. Spice to the taste and add milk as usual.

Fashions for February.

For the month of February only a few novelties of attire are published, but the few that appear are sure to be of positive value. Not only are they likely to become permanent skirt often contrasting with the over-dress, and the latter combining either the skirt fabric or another differing materially in its decoration. The pattern is so arranged that the vest and panel effects may easily be produced, guides in the form of perforations showing the outlines suited to its general style. The front and back have deep clusters of shirrings at the neck and waist-line, and the clusters are neatly confined by fitted stays. A graceful adjustment is made over the hips by a long dart under each arm, and side seams made quite far back; and the per-favorites, but they usually bring with them a pleasant prophecy of the styles that are to follow. Street costumes, with wraps and other outer garments, are displayed in shapes that will remain in favor until the warm weather compels other changes.

Not only may the February patterns be chosen with full assurance of their continued popularity, but the selection of fabrics for their development may be made with equal confidence, for at this time in the season the results of the weavers' labor have crystallized, so that their exact uses and values can easily be determined.

Misses' Costume.

The costume, Fig. 1, is very stylish, yet very simple in its fashioning, and is here made of dark green lady's-cloth, with an effective application of velvet to enrich it. The skirt is of the prevailing four-gored shape, with a double box-plaited flounce for its edge decoration.

The over-dress has a closely fitted basque body, which is pointed at the front and back and arched slightly high at the sides. Its draperies are in coat skirt style, extending quite low upon the skirt and flaring handsomely at the centers of the front and back, and are seamed to the body in prettily arched seams at the sides. They are over-faced in panel fashion with velvet at their front edges, and the front of the body is also over-faced in vest style with the velvet and closed with buttons and button-holes. A row of buttons, upon corresponding button-holes simulated with gold braid, is arranged down each back edge of the vest facing; and larger buttons, arranged upon larger button-holes outlined with braid, ornament the back edges of the panel facings from the bottom to a little more than half way to the top. A large bow of wide Ottoman ribbon is fastened over the end of the middle seam of the body, this seam, together with under-arm and side-back gores and single bust darts, completing the fitting of the body in a graceful manner. An officer's collar of velvet is about the neck, and inside it is worn the admired choker collar of snowy linen. Cuffs of fine linen are worn in the sleeves, which are prettily trimmed with velvet to resemble deep cuffs that extend from the inside seam across the under side of the wrist nearly to the same seam on the upper side, where each terminates under a row of buttons and simulated button-holes.

Combinations of two or more fabrics are very effective in costumes of this description, the to be followed being given in the pattern. The skirt may be decorated at the foot with any preferred garniture, and, if an elaborate effect be desired, may be trimmed up the exposed portions of the front and back. Braids, feather and fur bands, velvet ribbons, etc., provide a stylish garniture for the overdress. Cloths and other firmly woven textures will often be garnifectly fitting coat sleeves are slightly gathered at the top to stand high at the shoulders. Buttons and button-holes close the front below the clusters of shirrings, and hooks and loops are used along the latter with neat effect. The ties are attached at each side of the lower cluster of shirrings in the back, and brought forward and tied negligently but artistically at the left side in effect, and is made of illuminated cloth enriched by effectively applied garnitures of velvet and velvet ribbon. The kilt has a smoothly fitting yoke for its upper part; and its plaits are not very broad, but are securely stayed underneath by tapes. A band of velvet about nine inches deep is applied to the lower part of the skirt before the plaits are laid, and the result is very pretty.

The over-skirt has a full, deep, oval back-drapery that is simple in its draping, which is accomplished by few but studiously arranged plaits in its side edges. The front-drapery falls with a short, apron-like effect at the center of the front and at the left side, and in a sharp point quite low down at the right side. The lower corners of the shorter portion are rounded off gracefully, and plaits, laid in the side edges and just above where the point flares from the wider portion, drape the front-drapery beautifully. A row of velvet ribbon borders the edges of both the front and back draperies, and a large rosette, formed of loops of velvet ribbon, is fastened over the plait near the center of the front-drapery.

The basque is also bordered about the lower edges with a row of velvet ribbon, and the close sleeves are each encircled a little above the wrist edge with a band of ribbon decorated near the outside seam with a small rosette. Velvet ribbon is clustered in loops in jubot fashion at the throat, and buttons and button-holes make the closing. An officer's collar completes the neck, and a full lisse ruche is worn with dressy effect. A basque fits the figure smoothly and closely, its fitting being the result of well-graced bust darts, under-arm gores and center and side-back seams that terminate in under-folded plaits below the waist-line. The basque is deeply notched below the closing, arches high over the hips, and falls in square postilion outline at the back, the plaits at the ends of the seams producing a handsome box-plaited effect.

Such costumes may be constructed of any preferred variety of dress goods, and the garniture may be simple or elaborate, as preferred. Combinations of two or more fabrics result very effectively in costumes of this style.

tured with ruffles or plaitings having pinked edges.

Ladies' Outdoor Toilette.

The Newmarket coat and the ulster have a handsome rival in the pelisse, which is an admirable wrap for traveling, promenading, etc. The pelisse is here represented, Fig. 2, as developed in fancy cloth, which may be classed among illuminated cloths, so beautifully are the many colors interwoven. It is lined all through with quilted surah of a deep scarlet hue, and its ties are of the predominating color of the cloth. The entire completion of the garment is severely plain, and is charmingly of the closing. A standing collar with its ends reversed in Piccadilly fashion is the approved completion for the neck.

Cloths of all varieties not too thick to be shirred are suitable for such wraps, and plain or quilted linings may be added, as preferred. Handsome brocades are frequently made up in to pelisses, and so are ottomans, velvets and satin-finished, heavy silks, and these always have a lining of plush or quilted surah or satin. A costume of any preferred style and material may be worn under the pelisse, and plaitings, ruffles or other garnitures may be added to the skirt.

Lodge Locals.

Recorders are invited to correspond. Lodges may also find suitable reading here for "Good of the Order."

OUR CITY LODGES.

Golden Gate, No. 8.

H. A. Clark, P. M. W., of Santa Cruz, made a visit to Golden Gate on the 15th inst. There were two candidates who received the M. W. Degree. The work was done in an unexceptionable manner, which drew a high compliment from Brother Clark, of Santa Cruz Lodge. This Lodge has a fine staff of officers, and is in a very prosperous condition, one or more candidates being admitted on each meeting night.

Unity, No. 27.

Tuesday evening, the 12th inst., was a memorable night in this thrifty Lodge. After the regular business of the Lodge had been carefully attended to, the question of subscribing for the capital stock of the A. O. U. W. Hall Association was well considered and discussed in extenso. The result of their deliberations was to agree to take 200 shares by the Lodge, and 120 shares by individual members, making a total of $3,200. From expressions given by those who were present, it is quite safe to put Unity, No. 27, and her members down for $5,000. Deputy Jordan was present, and in the course of some appropriate and well-timed remarks stated that steps had been taken to form a new Lodge of D. of H. in District No. 1 soon. Just at the time of closing, Wm. H. Jordan, P. G. M. W., E. M. Reading, Grand Lecturer, and P. Veasy, P. M. W., called at the Lodge room from a short visit to Olympic, No. 127. This was one of the grandest and best meetings of a Workmen's Lodge we have ever seen. There were but few words, but there were acts that will tend to perpetuate our Order.

Valley, No. 30.

On Wednesday evening, April 24, Valley, No. 30, will give an entertainment and ball at the Mechanics' Pavilion, that promises to eclipse any social event ever given under the auspices of the A. O. U. W. Five hundred dollars has been put at the disposal of an efficient Committee to put this event in motion. The Grand Lodge will be invited and 3,000 tickets have been issued which will be sold to the members of Valley at 50 cents each, who may wish to invite their friends. Brother Dan McLeod is chairman of the Committee. This social is looked forward to with great anticipation.

At its last meeting, this Lodge rejected the proposed amendments in reference to the establishment of a General Bureau of Relief in the form in which they were presented, without prejudice, however, to the idea of a General Relief Committee in this city, and also signifying its intention to acquiesce in any measures touching this subject that might be adopted by the Grand Lodge. An amendment to the by-laws was passed, the effect of which will be to pay no more extra assessments from the General Fund, until the necessary amount ($3,000) is accumulated to pay for the shares subscribed toward building the new hall. Four applicants were elected to membership and four propositions received.

Spartan, No. 38.

On Friday evening, the 15th inst., held a meeting in their cozy Lodge room in Shields' building that was quite interesting. After the business of the Lodge, five candidates whose average age was 33 years and six months were given the J. W. Degree, and the M. W. Degree was conferred on two candidates. The work of each officer was unexceptionably correct in every particular, and rendered in a most pleasing manner. It is a well-known fact that no Lodge in this State can excel the present corps of officers of Spartan in rendering the work. It is but a just tribute to one of their officers, Brother E. N. Dempsey, Overseer, to say that in eloquent diction and impressive delivery we have never heard the work of the Overseer rendered better. This Lodge is in a very prosperous condition, their meetings well attended and made very enjoyable to visitors, who are treated with a warm and friendly greeting and made to feel at ease and as though they were in their society home. Spartan has been frequently named the "Lodge of Politicians." We will nominate it a representative Lodge of the A. O. U. W. of San Francisco, among whom are gifted members of the different professions, a Superior Judge, and other leading and prominent citizens of our metropolis.

Magnolia, No. 41.

The association of energetic men in our Order for beneficent purposes is signally illustrated in Magnolia, No. 41. Having an early organization with the purpose of extending to their members sick benefits of $10 per week, an additional sum of $100 on the death of a member and $50 on the death of a member's wife, it was a mooted question as to their existence. There have been times in their history when dark clouds hung over them and threatened dissolution, but push, pluck and persistent efforts have placed them in the first rank as a Lodge of Workmen. During all these years there have been but three deaths and not one from natural causes. This Lodge has 260 members, largely made up of young men, and nearly $6,000 standing to their credit in bank. A feature of this Lodge is that it has been favored with good officers. Their Recorder, John Hoesch, and Financier, A. N. Levy, have both held their positions over four years. The present M. W., Brother Livingston, has had a large experience in older societies as a presiding officer and honors the position he now holds. At times they hold quite lively debates in advancing the interests they are promoting, but happily all questions are settled in the Lodge room. On the 18th inst. one candidate was given the J. W. Degree and several applications received. On the question of taking A. O. U. W. Hall stock, it is quite certain that the Lodge and members will take over $5,000.

Myrtle, No. 42.

The history of nearly every Lodge of Workmen in this city has been one of a series of struggles, disappointments and final triumph. In the formation of Myrtle, No. 42, a few well known society men were its chief promoters. They determined from its inception to select only men of good character and high moral standing. This policy has been kept up, and quality instead of quantity has been their "shibboleth" all through these years. Their growth has been steady, but slow, and they now have 168 members, made up largely from older fraternal societies, and a personnel as a Lodge of which they are justly proud and of which there is no better in this city. As a rule their attendance is below the average, but their meetings are homelike, fraternal and always pleasant, especially to visitors. The officers of Myrtle have been in the past, with few exceptions, selected from among men who have filled high civic duties. Their present corps of officers have been chosen with signal fitness to their respective positions, and are always at their posts. In this connection we call attention to a new and correct method invented by H. L. Sanborn, Financier, to keep the financial books of the Lodge, and will probably in a future number explain the system which he has adopted.

Burns, No. 68.

The present term promises to be a very pleasant and successful one. There is an increased attendance and general good feeling prevails among the members. Brother L. Vincent, M. W., is the youngest presiding officer that Burns has had. It is not asserting too much to say that he has proved himself an efficient officer and worthy of the honorable position he occupies. On Thursday evening, February 7th, there was quite an influx of visitors, among whom were E.

Danforth, D. G. M. W., and Deputies Poland and Carroll, Brothers E. F. Loud, P. M. W., of Valley, No. 30, C. H. M. Curry, P. M. W., of Yerba Buena, No. 14, and quite a number of other visiting Workmen from sister Lodges. The J. W. Degree was conferred on three candidates in a manner that called for several compliments from the Grand Officers. There was a general good time and a very pleasant evening.

This Lodge will have an old time reunion on Thursday evening, February 28th. Past Master Flint, its first presiding officer, and a well known worker in the cause, will occupy the chair. Special efforts are being made to have all of the charter members present, and visitors from many others of the city Lodges have signified their intention to attend the session.

Olympic, No. 127.

There was quite a celebration in Olympic Lodge room on Tuesday evening, February 19th. The J. W. degree was conferred on two candidates and the M. W. degree on three of our prominent citizens. The work was tendered in a correct and dignified manner, especially so that by Brother Adams, M. W. Our Olympians are adding to their roll men who occupy a high social position, and of which they appreciate in a marked degree. This Lodge has had seasons of depressions and discouragements in full measure. At the present time prosperity and a brilliant future is assured. After a very enjoyable recess, Rev. Robert Mac Kenzie, Stuart Taylor, Dr. George J. Bucknall, R. B. Jones, all being the new made Master Workmen made eloquent and happy speeches. L. Vincent, M. W., of Burns Lodge, P. Veasey, P. M. W., of Hercules, Brother A. L. Cummings, the WATCHMAN representative, Brother Adams, M. W., Dr. Dean, Medical Examiner of Olympic, and others made appropriate and well-timed remarks. A good meeting in a Workmen Lodge is one of the happy but not infrequent episodes of life.

Noe Valley, No. 185.

Noe Valley, No. 185, herewith notifies its friends that it will give a prize masquerade ball in the hall, corner Twenty-fourth and Church streets, on the evening of February 27th.

Silver Spray, No. 3, D. of H.

At their last meeting, February 12th, there was a good attendance, and several matters of interest considered for the benefit of this thrifty Lodge. On the question of taking stock, after due deliberation it was almost a unanimous vote to subscribe for 10 shares of the capital stock. Miss Lucy McNear, the efficient Recorder, is now serving her seventh term.

Evening Star, No. 23, D. of H.

Evening Star Lodge, No. 23, D. of H., will give their first anniversary entertainment and reception on Wednesday evening, March 5th, at Ixora Hall, Mission street. The members are making efforts to give a fine and enjoyable reception. There is no doubt that this will be a very pleasant meeting and happy event.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

A Washington's Birthday benefit was announced for the old mother Lodge, at Deitz's Opera House, Oakland, to take place last evening. We will give particulars in next issue.

Oakland, No. 2.

Oakland Lodge, No. 2, was visited last Friday night by Grand Lecturer E. M. Reading, accompanied by Past Master N. W. Hanscom. The visiting brethren were introduced by Past Master A. W. Bishop, after which the Master, Brother Lake, in a neat address welcomed the Brothers, and invited them to seats by the station of the Master Workman. Under the head of Good of the Order, Brother Reading was introduced, and delivered an address of a half hour's duration, in which matters of interest were alluded to in such a manner as to call forth the approval of the large number of members present. Brother Hanscom was next introduced, and warmly welcomed. His speech was short, practical and to the point. Brothers Bishop, Russell, Mitchell and others responded, after which the Lodge was closed in due form, the Brothers agreeing that a more pleasant and instructive meeting had seldom been held in Oakland.

Occidental, No. 6, and Pacific, No. 7.

One of the most enjoyable fraternal events of the season was the visit of Occidental, No. 6, to Pacific, No. 7, last Thursday evening, in their spacious hall, corner of Twelfth and Franklin streets, Oakland. As it occurred on the eve of our going to press, however, our report will have to be abbreviated. There were present from San Francisco, Grand Foreman David McClure, Grand Lecturer E. M. Reading and Deputy Grand Master Edwin Danforth; also Master Workman W. H. Fuller, and P. M. W. Thos. Murray, of San Francisco, No. 4; P. M. W. Baker, of Myrtle, No. 42, and others. The members of Pacific were out in force, and many looked somewhat bewildered as they came in the room and found a magnificent spread blockading almost the entire space. They speedily found seats around the edges, however, and joined heartily in the warm welcome extended by Master Workman H. A. Schulze to the Grand officers, and also to the 60 visiting brethren of Occidental who arrived under "Good of the Order." After some entertainment in the shape of instrumental and vocal music from Brothers Lenoir and Britton, the Lodge closed, and all drew up to the festive board. After disposing of the solids and fluids, as far as was comfortable to the inner man, then under the soothing influence of grateful Havanias, there welled up springs of eloquence, which made those present think that it was indeed good to be there. Brief, incisive and witty speeches were delivered by the Grand Officers afore mentioned, and also by Master Workman Fred R. Weigle, of Occidental, and J. J. Shutz of the same Lodge, and District Deputy of District No. 1. Pleasantly interspersed among these were songs by Brothers Lenoir and Smith, of Pacific, and Past Master Baker, of Myrtle, and also comic recitation by Brother Britton of Pacific and Brother Rinehart of Occidental, all of which were applauded to the echo, and heartily encored. Later in the evening, and when the smoke of battle had cleared away, a delegation of ladies from the Degree of Honor Lodge, Ivy, No. 4, gave their husbands and friends a pleasant surprise by appearing on the scene, and were welcomed to also partake of and listen to the good things. The party dispersed in time to take the 11 o'clock train home, all expressing themselves as highly delighted. The energetic committee to whom the credit of this reception largely belongs, was composed of Brothers Lenoir, Finch, Jeffress and Reed.

Keystone, No. 64.

Is still at work with a gradually increasing attendance, to the credit, be it said, of the M. W., Robert Gay, and his supporting officers. At their meeting last Tuesday, the question of admitting foreigners of less than six months residence, was discussed favorably and unfavorably, and forcibly for the negative. The building of a Hall and Social and Literary A. O. U. W. Home was urged. This Lodge has good members and is determined to have more of them.

Ashler, No. 165.

On Tuesday evening, the 12th inst., quite a large number of gentlemen, both members and non-members, convened by invitation at the Lodge room of Ashler, No. 165, in Alameda, to listen to a lecture on the Hawaiian Islands, by Brother F. A. Harnden.

George Washington.

(SELECTED.)

There's a star in the West that will never go down,
Till the records of valor decay,
We must worship its light, though it's not our own,
For liberty bursts in its ray.
Shall the name of Washington ever be heard
By a freeman and thrill not his breast?
Is there one out of bondage that hails not the word,
As the Bethlehem Star of the West?

"War, war to the knife, be enthralled or ye die!"
Was the echo that woke in the land;
But it was not his voice that had prompted the cry,
Nor his anger that kindled the brand.
He raised not his arm, he defied not his foes,
While a leaf of the olive remained,
Till goaded with insult his spirit arose,
Like a long baited lion enchained.

He struck with firm courage the blow of the brave,
But sighed for the carnage that spread;
He indignantly trampled the yoke of the slave,
But wept for the thousands that bled.
Though he threw back the fetters and bearded the strife
Till man's charter was fairly restored,
Yet he prayed for the moment when freedom and life
Shall no longer be pressed by the sword.

Oh! his laurels were pure, and his patriot name
In the page of the future shall dwell,
And be seen in the annals the foremost and fame,
By the side of Hoffer and Tell.
Revoke not my song, for the wise and the good
Among Britons have nobly emulated,
That his was the glory and ours was the blood
Of the deeply stained fields of the West.

George Washington.

We go to press upon the eve of a national holiday—the anniversary of the birth of Washington. The occasion is one, which calls for sincere regard and thoughtful celebration. History, which chronicles the long struggle of the colonies for liberty, records the eloquent words and noble deeds of many a patriot, statesman and warrior, but they all group themselves around one central figure who commands the homage of the world—a name that was a pillar of cloud by day to lead our ancestors from bondage into the promised land of freedom, and a pillar of fire by night to guard them from the hate of a pursuing foe; a name, that in peace attracted, like a lodestone, the people's confidence; a name that silently mingles with all that is noble and glorious in free institutions—the name of George Washington.

We have all noticed how memory and sentiment are influenced by the magical law of association. The old man who goes back to the place of his birth and the play ground of his childhood, is young again. No true American can walk over the fields of Lexington, Monmouth, Camden or Yorktown and not feel the spirit of liberty thrill and stir him. But nothing in history so deeply stirs and impresses the mind like a great personal example. Ideas, to live, must be embodied. Truth, like Anteus, is powerless till its feet touch the earth. This is why religion in all ages ever seeks for voice and expression in the life and words of some great soul. We are always looking about for some Saul, a head taller than the rest, to nominate as a leader in politics or religion, and are ready to kindle bonfires and throw up our caps when he appears. So, from the North to the South, from the East to the West, in all towns, villages and cities, the name that comes spontaneously to utterance as the most complete embodiment of our National ideal, is the name of George Washington.

A late foreign writer says that Washington was not a genius; that he was only a good man possessed of rare common sense, whom a happy conjunction of circumstances hoisted upon the pedestal of history. But what is genius? The pyrotechnical power of the orator who sends words like burning, blazing rockets into the air? The inspiration that effulges into poetry or song, and like the Italian cactus, dies in the blossoming? Then Washington was no genius, for he had no such gifts. But he had what is equally great and far better—the genius of heroic action, the power that cuts and cleaves a path through all impediments. How much greater the genius that can make life a majestic poem! We honor the genius that created the ideal Republic of Plato, or the Utopia of Sir Thomas More. But how much more should we honor the power that can clear away all the undergrowths of cavil, prejudice, suspicion, lack of faith, hesitancy and confusion, and lay deep and lasting the foundation of an actual Republic.

Which is the greater, the man who by some lucky chance discovers a great ideal, or the man who organizes it into mills, factories, railroads, telegraphs, reapers, sewing machines, and the like? No man was ever more gifted in this line of action than Washington. When called to command, the majority of the American people had resolved on independence, but they possessed no coherency, no unity of action. The thirteen Colonies were held together in a frail partnership, and each one jealous of the other. The Colonial Congress was a big, noisy debating society. It had no power to levy armies, raise money and prosecute a war with vigor. The army was a tumultuous crowd of volunteers, enlisted for a few months. It had no military chest nor commissariat. Washington solved the problem by the geometry of his own personal ability. He said to this social chaos, "Let there be light," and light arose.

As soon as the flush of feverish excitement, caused by the heroism of Bunker Hill and the Declaration of Independence, had subsided, and the haggard face of war, with all its horrors, became visible, Washington quickly saw that the success of the Colonies did not depend upon grand strategy, brilliant movements, winning a battle now and then, or holding this or that city, but on their ability to wear out the patience and exhaust the military resources of Great Britain. This slow, conservative or Fabian policy, as it is called, always requires a master mind to carry it through successfully. The hope and confidence of the people is very fickle, and can only be kept alive by dramatic movements and dazzling success. Hence, the dashing Gates fresh from the victory of Saratoga, for a while, stole away the hearts of the people. Even many in Congress clamored for his elevation to the chief command. Washington was too slow for them. How his resources must have been taxed that terrible winter at Valley Forge, or while retreating before Lord Howe with a shattered, half-clad, half-fed army across Jersey, the people everywhere in despair, soldiers deserting, many in Congress plotting his superseding, but he never wavered from his policy, never lost faith in the cause, was patient, calm, serene and indomitable. He paid no attention to the lies and slanders of enemies. He had no time nor disposition to counter-plot against any. He was the soul of the revolution. His personal presence and magnetism were felt from the center to the circumference of the land, cheering the despondent, casting light over hours of darkness, speaking words of practical wisdom and hope to disheartened and embarrassed statesmen, and by the sheer force of his personal will, integrity of character and creative resources for seven long years he held the army and the people together, until England, having spent a hundred million pounds, was so utterly exhausted as gladly to offer peace.

When the war was over and independence acknowledged, still the country hung on the ragged verge of social anarchy. Called to organize a new Government, fill the offices for the first time and put the machinery in motion, in a time of such general uneasiness, uncertainty, fear and clash of opinions, it was a formidable task, and yet Washington satisfactorily accomplished it, for the simple reason that he had no sinister aims to secure, no hungry partisans to feed, no pledges to redeem, no favorites to reward, no enemies to punish. In the formation of his Cabinet, his nominations for the Judiciary and all places of trust or profit, he looked over the whole field and sought for good men, regardless of their political views.

In his bosom there was always one paramount sentiment from the hour he took the first inaugural oath, to the hour he wrote his farewell address, and that was the glory and perpetuity of the Union. He foresaw all its dangers. He warned the people against party feeling and sectional strife. He exhorted them to stand by the Union as the only sure paladium of liberty. He told them that if that colossal fabric were demolished the time would never come again when it could be re-erected.

All we need to complete the glory and prosperity of this land is a revival of the patriotism, honor, honesty, unselfishness and unpartisan spirit that characterized Washington, the man "first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

Enlightened Progress and Latter-Day Influence of Fraternal Societies.

Fifteen years ago, the Masons, Odd Fellows,

THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY.

Foresters, Red Men, Druids and similar societies of comparatively ancient origin, occupied mainly the field of secret fraternal organizations in the United States. They fulfilled well their missions and purposes then, as they still continue to do. Their plans, however, did not embrace the scope and field of action that is now being sought to be covered by the younger societies.

What has been sought to be especially accomplished by the younger societies (and which has been in a great measure successful) is the combining of fraternity and relief. Whatever degree of success is yet lacking among them, is doubtless occasioned by making the latter feature more prominent than the former; or, in other words, to maintain the highest degree of prosperity and stability among them, it is necessary, in the minds of the ablest and most experienced thinkers in this line, to keep a constant equilibrium, not letting the business features overbalance the fraternal ones.

The history of these mutual beneficial organizations of a fraternal nature is an interesting one. How they have enlarged the sphere of relief by extending it in a business-like and systematic manner beyond the life of the member to the aid of his family in a full and sufficient degree, is known to all observers. Following the birth of the A. O. U. W., fifteen years ago last October, there have sprung into existence numerous organizations, all bearing a greater or less resemblance to this their elder sister, and all accomplishing much good. Despite the disdainful ignoring first, then the sneers, and finally the open rivalry of jealous and interested parties, they have advanced steadily, not only filling the wants of the people for good and cheap life assurance, but extending to all who desire the additional boon of a hearty, warm brotherhood, which thousands can attest from practical experience, is more than a mere sentiment. From familiarity with the methods of life assurance gained by their experience in these societies, the people are finding out, too, the modes of operation in these affairs which had been kept quiet before. Instead of finding that the interest on their deposits constituted the motive power of the entire financial machinery, and accumulated the reserve fund for the payment of policies, as was claimed by many, it is found that this interest, as a rule, did little more than pay the extravagant salaries of the officials, and in many cases did not accomplish even that, as is evidenced by the many deplorable wrecks of companies stranded on the shores of extravagance, mismanagement and dishonesty during the past quarter of a century. It is now generally conceded that their reserve fund was accumulated largely from what are known as "lapsed policies," and the fact that beneficiary organizations have equal if not better facilities for acquisitions in this manner from the fickle-minded, shows them to be as well established in this respect as the older companies. In other respects these have the advantage of the older companies, in that their expenses are very light, the most of the work being performed, and a constant growth greater than continual loss, being assured by honorary services.

In no place do fraternal societies flourish to a greater extent than on this Pacific Coast. There are several reasons for this. Our society, as is well known, is largely cosmopolitan, especially in this city, and as we get older as a community there is a tendency towards unification, which is no where better accomplished than by these societies.

In numbers of these societies women are now admitted on the same footing as men, and their refining and elevating influence is strongly felt while their presence as members and officers is assuredly claimed to be a source of strength rather than weakness to the societies as business organizations. Here, too, young men find better society by far than is to be gained in the ordinary walks of life. It is a society which educates and improves, as is attested by the history of many a young man who has made his first start in the career of a successful speaker or parliamentarian within the halls of the Lodge or Council room. Fraternal societies may also be considered the nurseries of republicanism, in that all meet and mingle on the same level, and many here take their first lessons in learning to submit gracefully to majority rule. While not attempting to occupy the same field as the churches, or in any respect to be considered as supplanters or rivals, they yet are accomplishing many desirable things heretofore unaccomplished by the churches. They are teaching a broader philanthropy, a heartier and warmer brotherhood and good fellowship; and while, as a rule, not requiring specific pledges for temperance, are indirectly accomplishing great good in that direction, their whole tendency being towards temperance and refinement. Indeed, in a few words, the matter may be summed up by saying that the whole trend of fraternal societies in this age of the world is towards unifying and elevating mankind.

Festivities of the Day.

Yesterday was the 152d anniversary of Washington's birthday. There was announced to be a parade and review of State militia at the Presidio, and a number of social and dramatic entertainments, but no general celebration that would be styled imposing in this city. As the 22d of February is a legal holiday, there was, however, a general suspension of business.

A VISIT TO MOUNT VERNON.—Judge S. T. Coulter and wife, of Santa Rosa, representatives of the State Grange of California, while recently attending the National Grange, P. of H., in Washington City, paid a visit to the old home of Washington. Through their kindness, ourselves and readers are indebted for some of the illustrations and information concerning the "Father of Our Country" given in this issue.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH OFFICIALS.—Great Britain employs 6,000 officials at a cost of $10,000,000 to collect her internal revenue. The United States employs 4,000 at a cost of a little over $5,000,000 to do a similar business. Yet our territory is almost thirty times as large as that of the United Kingdom.

The Birthday of Washington.

[By RUFUS CHOATE.]

The birthday of the "Father of his Country!" May it ever be freshly remembered by American hearts! May it ever re-awaken in them a filial veneration for his memory; ever rekindle the fires of patriotic regard for the country which he loved so well, to which he gave his youthful vigor and his youthful energy during the perilous period of the early Indian warfare; to which he devoted his life in the maturity of his powers, in the field; to which again he offered the counsels of his wisdom and his experience, as President of the Convention that framed our Constitution, which he guided and directed while in the Chair of State, and for which the last prayer of his earthly supplication was offered up, when it came the moment for him so well, and so grandly, and so calmly to die. He was the first man of the time in which he grew. His memory is first and most sacred in our love, and ever hereafter, till the last drop of blood shall freeze in the last American heart, his name shall be a spell of power and of might.

Yes, gentlemen, there is one personal, one vast felicity, which no man can share with him. It was the daily beauty, and towering and matchless glory of his life which enabled him to create his country, and, at the same time, secure an undying love and regard from the whole American people. "The first in the hearts of his countrymen!" Yes, first. He has our first and most fervent love. Undoubtedly there were brave and wise and good men before his day in every colony. But the American nation, as a nation, I do not reckon to have begun before 1774. And the first love of that Young America was Washington. The first word she lisped was his name. Her earliest breath spoke it. It still is her proud ejaculation, and it will be the last gasp of her expiring life. Yes; others of our great men have been appreciated—many admired by all—but him we love; him we all love. About and around him we call up no dissident and discordant and dissatisfied elements; no sectional prejudice nor bias; no party, no creed, no dogma of politics. None of these shall assail him. Yes; when the storm of battle blows darkest and rages highest, the memory of Washington shall nerve every American arm and cheer every American heart. It shall relume that Promethean fire, that sublime flame of patriotism, that devoted love of country which his words have commended, which his example has consecrated:

"Where may the wearied eye repose
When gazing on the great,
Where neither guilty glory glows,
Nor despicable state?
Yes—one—the first, the last, the best,
The Cincinnatus of the West,
Whom envy dared not hate,
Bequeathed the name of Washington,
To make man blush there was but one."

Domestic Scenes in the Life of Washington.

In announcing our intention to have some domestic scenes from the life of Washington, engraved for this issue, a friend advised us not to omit the little hatchet scene. Having been totally unable, however, to prepare or get anything prepared that, in our minds, would do justice to that remarkable scene, we would instead call attention to two interesting and touching scenes of Washington and his mother.

At the time represented in the first engraving, George was eleven years old. Four other children younger than he, constituted a large family of almost infants, to be brought up by the widowed mother. George, as her eldest born, on whom she was to rely in her old age, was the recipient of that solicitude and anxious watchfulness over his early development, which such a pious and noble mother only knows.

How well and faithfully her work was done, history tells; and how well her love and care were appreciated may be observed by a glance at the second engraving, in which the grateful affection and honor of the now grown man is returned, as he bids farewell to his aged and infirm mother, before leaving her to take the inaugural oath as our first President.

It is a curious fact that wasps' nests sometimes take fire, as is supposed, by the chemical action of the wax upon the material of which the nest is composed. Many the fires of unknown origin in hay stacks and farm buildings may thus be accounted for.

Washington's Sword and Franklin's Staff.

[By John Quincy Adams.]

The sword of Washington! The staff of Franklin! O, Sir, what associations are linked in adamant with these names! Washington, whose sword was never drawn but in the cause of his country, and never sheathed when wielded

Franklin!—The mechanic of his own fortune; teaching, in early youth, under the shackles of indigence, the way to wealth, and, in the shade of obscurity, the path to greatness; in the maturity of manhood, disarming the thunder of its terrors, the lightning of its fatal blast; and wresting from the tyrant's hand the still more afflictive sceptre of oppression; while descending into the vale of years, traversing the Atlan-

What other two men, whose lives belong to the eighteenth century of Christendom, have left a deeper impression of themselves upon the age in which they lived, and upon all after time?

Franklin, the philosopher of the thunderbolt, the printing-press, and the ploughshare! What names are these in the scanty catalogue of the benefactors of human kind. Washington and Franklin! What other two men, whose lives belong to the eighteenth century of Christendom, have left a deeper impression of themselves upon the age in which they lived, and upon all after time?

WASHINGTON, THE MAN, TAKING LEAVE OF HIS MOTHER.

In war, contending, by the wager of battle, for the independence of his country, and for the freedom of the human race—ever manifesting, amidst its horrors, by precept and by example, his reverence for the laws of peace, and for the tenderest sympathies of humanity; in peace, soothing the ferocious spirit of discord, among his own countrymen, into harmony and union, and giving to that very sword, now presented to his country, a charm more potent than that attributed, in ancient times, to the lyre of Orpheus.

life, with fourscore winters upon his head, under the torture of an incurable disease, returning to his native land, closing his days as the chief magistrate of his adopted commonwealth, after contributing by his counsels, under the Presidency of Washington, and recording his name, under the sanction of devout prayer, invoked by him to God, to that Constitution under the authority of which we are here assembled, as the Representatives of the North American people, to receive, in their name and for them, these venerable relics of the wise, the valiant, and the good founders of our great confederated Republic—these sacred symbols of our golden age. May they be deposited among the archives of our Government! And may every American, who shall hereafter behold them, ejaculate a mingled offering of praise to that Supreme Ruler of the Universe, by whose tender mercies our Union has been hitherto preserved, through all the vicissitudes and revolutions of this turbulent world; and of prayer for the continuance of these blessings, by the dispensations of Providence, to our beloved country from age to age, till time shall be no more!

National Monument to Washington.

[By R. C. WINTHROP, July 4th, 1848.]

Fellow-Citizens:—Let us seize this occasion to renew to each other our vows of allegiance and devotion to the American Union, and let us recognize in our common title to the name and the fame of Washington, and in our common veneration for his example and his advice, the all-sufficient centripetal power, which shall hold the thick clustering stars of our confederacy in one glorious constellation forever! Let the column which we are about to construct be at once a pledge and an emblem of perpetual union! Let the foundations be laid, let the superstructure be built up and cemented, let each stone be raised and riveted in a spirit of national brotherhood! And may the earliest ray of the rising sun—till that sun shall set to rise no more—draw forth from it daily, as from the fabled statue of antiquity, a strain of national harmony, which shall strike a responsive cord in every heart throughout the republic!

Proceed, then, fellow-citizens with the work for which you have assembled. Lay the cornerstone of a monument which shall adequately bespeak the gratitude of the whole American people to the illustrious father of his country! Build it to the skies; you cannot outreach the loftiness of his principles! Found it upon the massive and eternal rock; you cannot make it more enduring than his fame! Construct it of the peerless Parian marble; you cannot make it purer than his life! Exhaust upon it the rules and principles of ancient and modern art; you cannot make it more proportionate than his character.

But let not your homage to his memory end here. Think not to transfer to a tablet or a column the tribute which is due from yourselves. Just honor to Washington can only be rendered by observing his precepts and imitating his example. Similitudine decoremus. He has built his own monument. We, and those who come after us, in successive generations, are its appointed, its privileged guardians. The widespread republic is the future monument to Washington. Maintain its independence. Uphold its constitution. Preserve its union. Defend its liberty. Let it stand before the world in all its original strength and beauty, securing peace, order, equality, and freedom, to all within its boundaries, and shedding light and hope and joy upon the pathway of human liberty throughout the world—and Washington needs no other monument. Other structures may fully testify our veneration for him; this, this alone can adequately illustrate his services to mankind.

Nor does he need even this. The republic may perish; the wide arch of our ranged Union may fall; star by star its glories may expire; stone by stone its columns and its capitol may moulder and crumble; all other names which adorn its annals may be forgotten; but as long as human hearts shall anywhere pant, or human tongues anywhere plead, for a true, rational, constitutional liberty, those hearts shall enshrine the memory and those tongues prolong the fame, of GEORGE WASHINGTON.

THE GRAVE OF WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.—Just above the plain in the suburbs of Fredericksburg is the grave of Mary Washington, marked now by an unfinished marble monument. It is strange that the tomb of the mother of the Father of His Country should stand a monument to the lack of patriotism of his countrymen. Worse still, it has been shamefully defaced by the hands of the vandal. Its sides have been marred by bullets, and the pretty, smooth face of the monument peppered by the shot of thoughtless sportsmen. No railing or enclosure of any sort protects the last resting-place of this great and good woman. The monument was undertaken in 1830 by a patriotic gentleman of Fredericksburg, who had completed it with the exception of the large pyramidal shaft, which to-day lies half imbedded in the ground a few yards from the grave.

Mount Vernon.

The home of Washington is situated on the right bank of the Potomac, seventeen miles south of the Capitol, and may be approached by land or water. Formerly, in cool autumn weather, it was a pleasant drive thither from Washington, across the famous Long Bridge, via the interesting old city of Alexandria, which, in the solemn silence of its deserted streets and warehouses, and with its many dilapidated, moss-covered buildings, reminds the traveler of cities in foreign lands. From Alexandria (about midway) the road runs partly over what once constituted the Washington estate, a princely domain of 8,000 acres.

Going by water, Fort Washington is the last landing made before reaching Mount Vernon, and is four miles distant therefrom.

Fort Washington was first called Warburton, and its availability as a point of fortification was suggested to General Washington as he viewed the elevated spot from the eastern piazza of his home, about the year 1790. It was blown up and abandoned in 1814 by our own forces, when the British troops passed up the river and captured Alexandria. From Fort Washington there is a fine view of the Capitol the grand dome seeming to touch the sky. It was here that an Indian was so impressed by the beauty of that wonder of architecture, that he exclaimed: "White man did not build it; Great Spirit made it!"

From the same point we obtain our first glimpse of Mount Vernon. Here the river is two miles wide, and the Mansion House has a stately look, being situated about two hundred feet above the water. The tolling of the bell and the hoisting of the flag announce to the passengers that they are approaching the home of Washington. Immediately under the bluff upon which the mansion stands is the reservation of a few acres, which was formerly used as a deer park.

Visitors are met at the landing by the courteous Superintendent, and proceed up a gentle acclivity to the tomb. To the left of the road is a high, well wooded hillside, abounding with sweet briar, trailing arbutus and other flowers. On the right is an open park, extending beyond the house. About half way up, in a small ravine, are several weeping willows, brought from the grave of Napoleon, at St. Helena. These vividly recall the epigrammatic order issued by this First Consul to his army on the death of Washington, beginning with, "Washington, the Friend of Liberty, is dead!"

The tomb is a plain brick structure, familiar, through multiplied prints, to every school boy in the land. It was built by Washington's executors, and in pursuance of a clause in his will designating the location, and saying, "it shall be built of brick." The front of the tomb is unpretending, with wide, arching gateway and double iron gates, above which, upon a plain marble slab, is this inscription: "Within this enclosure rest the remains of General George Washington."

The ante-room to the vault is about twelve feet square, and here are seen the sarcophagi. The one on the right contains the remains of General Washington, and that on the left the remains of Martha, his wife. In the vault at the rear repose about thirty relatives, members of the Washington, Blackburn, Corbin, Bushrod, Lewis and Curtis families.

To the vault the body of Washington was removed April 19, 1831, in consequence of a feeling of insecurity, a man having broken into the old tomb and stolen a skull, which he claimed to be that of Washington, but which proved to be of one of the Blackburn family.

In the winter of 1832 Congress, for the second time, made an effort to effect the removal of Washington's body to the chamber under the crypt of the Capitol, originally designed for its sepulchre.

Adams, Clay, Webster, Thomas, and even Washington's venerable biographer, Chief Justice Marshall, earnestly endeavored to secure its removal, the centennial anniversary of Washington's birth being selected for the solemn occasion. The family, however, was firm in refusal, through respect for the well-known wish of the illustrious dead.

The body was placed in the sarcophagus, where it now rests, on the 7th of October, 1837. The door of the inner vault was then closed, and the key thrown into the Potomac.

The sarcophagi which contained the remains of Gen. Washington and his wife were presented by John Struthers, of Philadelphia, and were wrought by his own hand, from solid blocks of Pennsylvania marble. Over the door of the tomb, on a plain tablet, is the inscription: "I am the Resurrection and the Life. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." The sarcophagus of Mrs. Washington is perfectly plain, with the simple words: "Martha, Consort of Washington. Died May 21st, 1801; aged 71 years."

The sarcophagus of Washington is also plain, being ornamented only with the United States

The Tomb of Washington.

[From a speech delivered in the Legislature of New York, in the year 1845, by the Hon. J. W. Savage.]

I earnestly hope that this resolution will be adopted by the House, without a dissenting vote. The subject is one of deep interest to every man who first drew his breath on American soil. Sir, it was beautifully said of Washington, that "God made him childless that the nation might call him Father."

Mount Vernon was his home; it is now his grave. How fitting, then, sir, it is that we, his children, should be the owners of the homestead and of our father's sepulchre.

coat of arms, upon a draped flag, under which is the simple word "Washington."

One of the talons of the eagle in the coat of arms was broken off during the Civil War by some eager relic hunter, which incident suggested the outer and higher gate.

This was the only outrage committed at Mount Vernon, though the unarmed pickets of both armies often met before the tomb—here, and here only, met as brothers. At the servants' request they left their arms at whatever point they entered the sacred domain, which was frequently three-quarters of a mile away, at the old Porter's Lodge.

The original tomb of Washington is seen to stranger's money should buy it, and no stranger's hand should drive the ploughshare over ashes sacred to every American. No mere individual is worthy to be the owner of a spot enriched with such hallowed memories. The mortal remains of the nation's idol should not be subject to the whim, caprice or cupidity of any man. These memorials are national, and to the nation they should belong; and it is the duty of every citizen to guard them from violence and dishonor.

Sir, no monument has ever been erected over the grave of Washington. He needs none but that which rises in majestic grandeur before the gaze of the world, in the existence of this great the right of the path to the house, and is surrounded by a white railing. This spot commands an extended view of the river, but has not the secluded quiet of the one now occupied, which may have been the reason why Washington desired the removal of the family vault, which was not effected for thirty-eight years, and until it had been entered and desecrated.

DEATH OF A WORTHY MAN.—We regret to record the death of another old Californian, Mr. Geo. F. Sylvester, who died in this city on the 9th inst. Mr. Sylvester's health has been poor for three or four years past, and especially so the last three months. He was born in New Bedford, Mass., in 1828, and came to this State early in 1850. He has been engaged in the seed business for more than 25 years, and achieved a general reputation for honest dealing and trustworthiness which will be found a high tribute to his memory. His brother Leander, who has been connected with him for 20 years, will continue the seed business at the old stand on Washington street, near Battery.

republic, with its millions of people rejoicing in the light and liberty of a free government. While the stars and stripes, waving above every capital, shall symbolize our national union, will any ask, Where is the monument to Washington? I believe, sir, that his name will prove more lasting than marble or brass. When every structure which filial love and gratitude may erect shall have crumbled to dust, the fame of our patriot father will still remain the theme of study and admiration.

There has been but one Washington, and God in His goodness gave him to us. Let us cherish his dust, and revere his memory. Let us together own his mansion and tomb. Let the youth of our nation make pilgrimages to the sacred spot and slake the thirst of unhallowed ambition at the well, where Washington was wont to draw; and when patriotism declines, let the vestals of liberty rekindle the flame at the fireside of the nation's sire. Sir, may we do much to keep alive, through successive generations, that patriotic fire which burns in the heart of every true American.

Sir, no man can read the life of Washington, without rising up from the task a better man; nor can a freeman step within the sacred precincts of Mount Vernon, and not feel the power of those associations which environ him. The troubled sea of passion in his soul subsides and he seems to hear a voice whispering to his spirit, "Peace, be still, Washington lies here!" Who could visit the farm of Washington and not experience a new thrill of patriotism? Or who, without a new incentive to love his country, could ramble through that garden, stand in that hall where heroes of the revolution were welcomed and refreshed, sit down in the library where Washington studied and meditated, and behold the chamber in which he slept and died? Sir, I am no prophet. But, when from such sacred memories as these, I turn to view the opposite picture, the veil of futurity seems to be lifted.

It needs no prophet's eye to scan along the line of time, the majestic outline of our nation's destiny, when the fruits of our free government shall be more and more developed, until this vast continent shall be peopled with freemen from sea to sea; when the fame of the nation shall reach the farthest islands and shores; when our star of empire, radiant with the beams of liberty, shall have grown to such magnitude as to attract the eyes and guide the steps of all nations; and when some queen of Sheba shall come over seas and continents to behold our greatness, and see the happy results of the wisdom of Washington. Then, sir, Mount Vernon will be sought, and thousands now unborn will wish to kiss the earth which cradled, and now covers the Father of his Country. How will we appear in that millennial day of our nation's destiny, if it shall be truly recorded, that the most sacred spot which God committed to our custody, was thrown away a sacrifice to parsimony, or some fashionable, fine-spun theories, with which true patriotism has no fellowship? Will not every American blush with shame, and wish that he could cover from the gaze of nations so dark a blot in the page of our history.

Sir, shall no spot be held sacred by Americans? Have we no reverence for the symbols of departed greatness? True, there are monuments at Bunker Hill and Baltimore. We have here and there a national memento. The curious can trace the crumbling ramparts and the remains of hasty breastworks, behind which the stout hearts of our forefathers beat with patriotic zeal, and over which they dealt dismay and death to our enemies. But, sir, as we have been reminded by our governor, these memorials, like ourselves, are fast passing away. Let us then secure this honored patrimony! Let Mount Vernon be the perpetual memento of our country's great deliverance, and let the reverence with which it is regarded, be the token of our gratitude! And when, in ages hence, the banks of the silvery Potomac shall resound as now, with the bell of passing vessel, uttering its tribute to the memory of Washington, and the flag at the masthead shall humbly droop, and the mariner stand uncovered in honor of the sacred spot, let future generations learn the lesson of gratitude and patriotism, which these tokens shall daily recite at Mount Vernon.

CONSERVATION OF LIGHT INTO ELECTRICITY.—The conversion of electricity into light is now a fact of every day utility, says Engineering, but the reverse process has been very slow of accomplishment. It has, however, been effected by Herr Sauer, whose sunlight battery has been described in the Electrotechnische Zeitschrift. The chemical rays furnish the power, and the battery will only act in sunlight. It consists of a glass vessel containing a solution of fifteen parts of table-salt and seven parts of sulphate of copper in 106 parts of water. In this is placed a porous cell containing mercury. One electrode is made of platinum, and the other of sulphide of silver, and both are connected with a galvanometer. When not in use, the whole is inclosed in a box. When in use, the platinum electrode is immersed in the mercury, and the other in the salt solution; the battery is placed in the sunlight, and the galvanometer needle is then found to be deflected, the sulphide of silver being the negative pole. If the sun is clouded, or any other change in the intensity of the light occurs, it is indicated by the needle. The exact effect produced by the light rays does not as yet appear very clear; but their presence distinctly produces electrical action, and their absence suspends it.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By ELIZA A. PITTSINGER.

[The following poem was written especially for LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION, and was delivered by its author at the entertainment given in honor of the occasion, at the First Unitarian Church, San Francisco, on the evening of February 12, 1884.]

Planets have their blessed Saviours,
And in records most sublime
Martyrs leave their holy footprints
On the earth-bound shores of time.
Ages have their great reformers,
Each demands its own supply;
Suns their golden hour of setting,
Flowers their time to bloom and die,
And the prophet finds his mission as an eagle finds the sky.

Freedom has her sainted heroes,
Moving by a mystic law,
Working out her knotty problems
By the lurid glare of war.
Evil brings its own rebellion,
Mercy balm to heal the wound,
And the toiling Sons of Sorrow,
Who were weary, sore and bound,
In our own beloved Lincoln their emancipator found.

Called, elected, duly chosen,
Was this hero of the time,
Making war with heavenly weapons
On the evils of his clime.
Bold in action, but as tender
As a lamb within its fold,
With the welfare of a nation
Grasped within his mighty hold,
And a spirit towering upward, that could not be bought or sold.

Glorious Lincoln, blessed martyr,
Heavenly center of our love!
With thy blind and willful people
How thy faithful spirit strove!
With thy friends and foes around thee
In that hurricane of strife
Calm, determined, firm they found thee,
In thy deeds of mercy rife,
While a bright celestial halo crowned and glorified thy life.

War was raging, men were dying,
Hope was waning by the strand,
Maidens weeping, mothers sighing
O'er the sorrows of their land.
But our heroes were brave-hearted,
And right valiantly were manned,
Like the heroes of old Homer
In their glory did they stand,
As they fought the mighty battles that were sweeping through the land.

And our Lincoln stood undimmed
As the war-tide ebbed and flowed;
Like a calm and mighty monarch
In his majesty he showed How a ruler of his people,
How a servant of his Lord,
Could be still a loving brother
To the tillers of the sod,
As he stood there in his grandeur 'neath the chastening of the rod.

Like a pine upon the mountain,
Like an oak upon the plain,
That withstood the raging tempest
Of the lightning and the rain;
That had stood for many winters,
That the storm and hurricane
Could not vanquish with the ruin
They had scattered o'er the plain—
So he stood among the battles of that siege and bloody reign.

Heaven elected, God appointed,
Was this ruler of the strife,
Called, commissioned and anointed
With the holy balm of life.
Oh, he stood there in his glory,
While the nations gave him praise,
And the grand, heroic story
Shone with laurel wreaths and bays,
As they crowned the blessed martyr of those dark rebellious days.

They crowned him with their laurel,
They mourned him with their tears,
And the records, they are written
On the everlasting years.
With their shadow still upon us,
Oh, we never can forget
That sad and fatal evening
When our Star of Beauty set—
When the wily Sons of Darkness their illustrious victim met!

But he lives in realms eternal,
And his spirit still is here,
I feel its charm upon me,
And it casteth out all fear—
Oh, Freedom dieth never,
Though its wily foes are near,
It shall hold the land forever,
It shall wipe away each tear,
For the revelation and the sign the time is almost here!

Its foes may slay its heroes,
Yet the heaven is alive,
And the more they seek its ruin
All the more it doth strive.
They may bring their deadly weapons,
They may plot, and they may plan,
Yet they cannot in their malice
Crush the loyalty of man;
As the God of Freedom liveth they shall fall beneath his ban.

Though our Lincoln fell a martyr
To their treachery and hate,
They lessened not his glory,
They tarnished not his fate.
Oh, he lives! he is immortal,
And he wears a crown of light
That floods the heavenly portal
With a luster pure and bright,
And his robe is like the moonbeams of a gorgeous summer night!

Celebration of Lincoln's Birthday.

Tuesday, Feb. 12th, was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, and flags waved over public and private buildings; especially on Montgomery and other leading streets were these tributes to the martyred President noticeable.

In the evening the anniversary was celebrated by appropriate ceremonies at the First Unitarian Church, under the auspices of the Lincoln
Grand Guard of Honor and the National Lincoln Association (California division). Both orders, in conjunction with the Lincoln Post, G.
A. R., appeared in uniform and occupied seats in the body of the church, which was crowded.
The altar was covered with a large silk flag, and over this was placed the picture of Starr King.
In front of the altar was placed a bust of Abraham Lincoln, sculptured by Marion Wells. At eight o'clock the Orders that bear Lincoln's name marched in, and, after taking their stand before the altar and giving a salute with their swords, took their seats. Edwin A. Sherman, Commander-in-Chief of the Lincoln Guard of Honor, after making some introductory remarks, presented the Lincoln Post with the bust of Lincoln before the altar. J. M. Davis, Commander of the Post, thanked the Lincoln
Guard in the name of the Post he represented.
Hon. Horace Davis was President of the occasion, and the Honorary Committee consisted of sixty prominent citizens. The introductory address, commemorating the birthday of Lincoln, and relating instances in his life, was made by Horace Davis. He said: "This church is the most appropriate place to hold these services; here another great patriot labored for liberty as truly as did Abraham Lincoln." Pointing to the portrait of Starr King that hung behind the pulpit, adorned by two silk flags, he said: "Starr King was a martyr, like Lincoln, for he gave his life for the Union and the cause of freedom. The richest treasure that a people can possess is the life of a great, good man. It is more priceless than a great poem, more valuable than gold. While we think of the noble character of Abraham Lincoln, let us also inquire what remains for each one of us to do to perpetuate the work he so grandly began."

Rev. T. K. Noble, Chaplain of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the Orator of the evening, delivered an eloquent address. "On an occasion like this," he said, "how vividly the past comes back. As we read again on the bulletin-board that Sumter is fired upon, what a feeling of wrath rises in our hearts. We ask ourselves again what our duty is. We are held to our homes by ties of love, yet our patriotism tells us to go to the field. Nineteen years ago the speaker saw in Washington city, coming from the National Hospital, two men—one a dignified, heavy man, the other a tall, gaunt man, with long, awkward limbs, without a single graceful outline, with a face seamed and wrinkled, with the saddest eyes he ever saw.
It need not be said that these two men were Charles Sumner and Abraham Lincoln. They had been visiting the wounded as they lay on their cots in the hospital. A few days afterwards Lincoln was assassinated, and there died one of the noblest men that ever lived. Shakespeare says that some men are born to greatness, others have greatness thrust upon them, and still others achieve greatness. Abraham Lincoln achieved his greatness. He was born in the humblest circumstances and was surrounded by the most adverse conditions. His career reads not like history, but like a tale from the 'Arabian nights.'"

The following was the remainder of the programme: Voluntary on the organ; Kepler's national hymn, by the choir; prayer, Rev.
James O. Rayner, U. S. A.; music, by the choir; reading of Abraham Lincoln's proclamation, Mr. Dennis; Battle Hymn of the Republic (the audience joining in the chorus), by the choir; music, by the choir; Lincoln (poem), Mrs.
Eliza A. Pittsinger; music, by the choir;
recitation, Abraham Lincoln (J. T. Goodman), Walter Leman; America, by the choir and the entire audience; benediction, Rev. E. H. Gray, D. D., Chaplain of the United States Senate
when Abraham Lincoln was assassinated.

Washington's Ancestors and the Origin of the American Flag.

[Reminiscences of Lord Ronald Gower, F. S. A.]

At Little Brington, a village near Northampton, England, is an old cottage in which lived the ancestors of George Washington. It is a neat old place, but with nothing remarkable about it, save that it was the nest of the great general's forefathers. Above the entrance door, inscribed on a stone slab, is the following: "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. Constructus, 1606." Great Brington lies some couple of miles from the smaller village of that name, where is the Washington cottage. At Great Brington there is a handsome church, remarkable for the very complete and perfect series of monuments of the family of Spencer. Still more interesting, however, than these monuments to the ancestors of Lord Spencer are the two plain slabs that cover the bones of George Washington's ancestors.
The oldest of these is that with an inscription on it to the memory of Lawrence Washington, deceased in 1619, leaving behind him eight sons and nine daughters. Two of Lawrence's children migrated to America; from one of these George Washington was descended. The other inscription is engraved on brass, beneath the Washington coat-of-arms, as follows:

"Here lies ye body of Eliz Washington, Widowe, who changed this life for Immortallitie ye 19th of March, 1622: as also ye body of Robert Washington, gentn., her late husband, second sonne of Robert Washington of Solgrave, in ye county of North., Esque., who depd. this life ye 10th March 1622, after they lived lovingly together."

We here see the origin of the American "star spangled banner," and of the stripes, for on the coat-of-arms on this old brass appears three stars, with the bars or stripes beneath them. The sexton told me that Charles Sumner had had a copy of the larger slab made by the local mason, and that both he and Motley, the historian, had taken great interest in these arms and inscriptions. It is certainly striking to see these humble mementoes of the ancestry of one of whom all English-speaking people are proud, in this old country church, lying near the splendid tombs of forgotten magnates. An interesting chapter might be written on the origin of the great flags of the world. To trace them back to their sources would often be no easy task; but that of the American Republic lies on the floor of Brington Church.

Franklin's "Parable Against Perse- cution."

January 6th was the 178th anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, and, as a result, the press of about that date referred quite generally to the man and his writings. Amongst the friendships of note contracted by Franklin was that with the Scotchman, Lord Kanes, for whom Franklin wrote out the following "Parable Against Persecution," which we then noticed, although we had not seen it in print before for many years:

"1. And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun.

"2. And behold, a man, bowed with age came from the way of the wilderness, leaning on a staff.

"3. And Abraham arose and met him and said unto him, 'Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet and tarry all night, and thou shalt arise early on the morrow and go on thy way.'

"4. But the man said, 'Nay, for I will abide under this tree.'

"5. And Abraham pressed him greatly; so he turned and they went into the tent, and Abraham baked unleavened bread and they did eat.

"6. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, 'Wherefore dost thou not worship the most high God, Creator of heaven and earth?'

"7. And the man said, 'I do not worship the God thou speakest of, neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a god which abideth alway in mine house and provideth me with all things.'

"8. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose and fell upon him and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness.

"9. And at midnight God called unto Abraham, saying, 'Abraham, where is the stranger?'

"10. And Abraham answered and said:
'Lord, he would not worship Thee, neither would he call upon Thy name; therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness.'

"11. And God said: 'Have I borne with him these hundred, ninety and eighty years, and nourished him and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me; and couldst not thou, that art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night?'

"12. And Abraham said: 'Let not the anger of the Lord wax hot against his servant; lo,

I have sinned, forgive me I pray Thee.'
"13. And Abraham arose and went forth into the wilderness and sought diligently for the man and found him, and returned with him to the tent and when he had entreated him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts."

Burdette's Lecture to Young Men.

Robert J. Burdette, the facetious editor of the Burlington Hawkeye, has been lecturing to large audiences in different parts of country, and in his amusing style he imparts to the rising generation some wholesome advice. The following is from one of his lectures:

"Be somebody on your own account, my son, and don't try to get along on the reputation of your ancestors. Nobody knows and nobody cares who Adam's grandfather was, and there is not a man living who can tell the name of Brigham Young's mother-in-law." The lecturer urged upon his hearers the necessity of keeping up with the every-day procession and not pulling back in the harness. Hard work never was known to kill men; it was the fun that men had in the intervals that killed them. The fact was, most people had yet to learn what fun really was. A man might go to Europe and spend a million dollars, and then recall the fact that he had a great deal more fun at a picnic twenty years ago that cost him just 65 cents. The theory that the world owed every man a living was false. The world owed a man nothing. There was a living in the world for every man, however, providing the man was willing to work for it.
If he did not work for it, somebody else would earn it and the lazy man "would get left." There were greater opportunities for workers out West than in the Eastern cities, but men who went out West to grow up with the country must do their own growing. There was no browsing allowed in the vigorous West.
An energetic man might go out into the far West, and in two or three years possess himself of a bigger house, a bigger yard, a bigger barn, and a bigger mortgage than he could obtain by ten years' work in the East. All young men ought to marry, and no young men should envy old men or rich men. In conclusion,
Mr. Burdette said that a man should do well whatever he was given to do, and not despise drudgery. The world wants good shovelers, teamsters and laborers, but it does not want poor lawyers, poor preachers, or poor editors.

Washington as a Farmer.

In the year 1790, Samuel Dean, D. D., Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, edited a volume of 400 pages, bearing the title, The New England Farmer, or Georgical Dictionary, containing a compendious "account of the ways and methods in which the most important art of husbandry, in all its various branches, is, or may be, practiced to the greatest advantage in this country." It seems then that agriculture was popular in Virginia, for in another paragraph, the author, in a hopeful strain, alludes to General Washington's love for the business as follows: "As a very respectable society in the commonwealth of Massachusetts have undertaken to propagate the knowledge of husbandry, the day may be at hand when the employment of the farmer shall no more be treated with contempt; when the rich, the polite and the ambitious shall glory in paying a close attention to their farms; when respectable persons shall confess it is one of the noblest employments to assist nature in her bountiful productions; when it shall be our ambition to follow the example of the first man in the nation, who does not think an attention to husbandry degrading, and when, instead of being ashamed of their employment, our laborious farmers shall, as a great writer says, 'toss about their dung with an air of majesty.'"

Articles of incorporation were filed Wednesday in this city by the National Lincoln Association. It proposes to perpetuate the memory of President Lincoln by holding annual celebrations of his birthday, and memorial services on the anniversaries of his death. There is no capital stock. The Directors are Washington Ayer, Columbus Waterhouse, Edwin A. Sherman, J. M. Buffington, J. L. Cogswell, R. H.
Webster and C. H. Wells.

METAL STRINGS FOR INSTRUMENTS.—Recent experiments with stringed instruments have shown that a much more sonorous tone can be obtained with metal strings than with those now in use, although the labor of playing on them is correspondingly increased. Steel wires plated with silver or copper gave the best results.

HOUSE RENTS are lower this winter in New York City, and it is believed that May 1st, the general moving day there, will inaugurate a further reduction.

prize for every discovery of a new comet made

"Honor to Whom Honor is Due."

THE WATCHMAN is in receipt of the appended communication, with the above caption, from North Star Lodge, No. 213, Smith's River, Del Norte county, in relation to Charles F. Deo. It will be remembered that a communication from him appeared in the issue of the WATCHMAN of December 22d, eulogizing the action of the Relief Committee, for their interest in his behalf. The communication was received at this office unsolicited, from Mr. Deo himself, and commented upon in a laudatory vein. It now appears that the Lodge aforementioned of which the brother is a member, felt hurt by his apparent ingratitude in thanking the Relief Committee so heartily, but at the same time ignoring efforts of his own Lodge in his behalf. Hence the communication from this Lodge, which we received last month but reserved till this issue, so as to be able to look into the merits of the case fully, and do no one any injustice. After corresponding with the Lodge in relation to the affair, and viewing also a letter from Brother Deo to the Relief Committee, we are of the opinion that while Brother Deo's action in ignoring his own Lodge was censurable, it was yet more a sin of omission than commission, and was not designed to create any trouble. In his last letter to the Relief Committee he says that he was sorry that his Lodge took offense at the letter he wrote to the WATCHMAN. Says he, "I did not have the least idea that I was hurting anyone's feelings in any way. My object was to give the Committee all the help in my power." In another place he says, "If I have done wrong, I am very sorry. To say that I am not thankful to North Star and Del Norte would be absurd in the extreme. I say, God bless them all," and then goes on making a statement to the effect that he supposed that if his statement had been over-partial to the Committee it was unintentional, and could probably be accounted for, because he felt under so great obligations to them for their more than brotherly aid. The WATCHMAN is glad to be able to remove any implied slur upon North Star Lodge, and to give "honor to whom honor is due," by publishing the communication, and stating that North Star and Del Norte Lodges, together with the Relief Committee all deserve their full meed of praise. All have done nobly, and we hope that no feeling prejudicial to any of the parties concerned may grow out of an action in which only emulation in noble deeds is found. Following is the North Star Lodge communication:

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—In your issue of Dec. 22d appears an article that, partly by what is stated, and chiefly by what it fails to state therein, reflects rather severely upon North Star Lodge, No. 213, A. O. U. W., and does a serious injustice to all concerned; and I am directed to prepare and forward for publication a statement of the facts in the case, with a proper expression of the feeling in the Lodge with reference to the matter.

The apparent objects of the publication of the article in question, the grateful acknowledgement of an indebtedness to the Relief Committee for services rendered, and the advancement of said Committee's interests with the Order, with a just tribute to the surgeon and physician—Dr. Lane—are all praiseworthy, in themselves, and, to the utmost extent of their justness and merit, heartily seconded by the respondents; but when, after giving prominent notice of the name, number and location of the Lodge, of which the disabled Brother, C. F. Deo, is a member, it proceeds to refer to the almost destitute condition in which the Brother was "discovered" and "placed on his feet again," by the Relief Committee, without so much as a further reference to North Star Lodge, utterly ignoring the kindness, care and material aid extended to the Brother by its members, and those of our sister Lodge, Del Norte, No. 183, and also of other friends outside of the Order, to all of whom the Brother is, and ought to feel, deeply indebted, for assistance rendered, we feel called upon to protest; and any delicacy that we would ordinarily feel, and that might properly belong to us in the effort to vindicate ourselves in the matter, is effectually removed by the wholesale affront given in the publication, not only to ourselves, but to the members of Del Norte Lodge, and also the friends outside the Order; and our Lodge forming the nucleus of the movement for the benefit of the Brother, and the funds contributed for his relief having been forwarded chiefly through us, we realize the imperative necessity of our taking immediate measures to correct the unjust impression conveyed in the published article, by a statement of the facts in the case, which are as follows:

After all measures for the relief of the disabled brother, here, had been exhausted, our Lodge determined to send him to St. Mary's Hospital, at San Francisco, for treatment, and to that end appropriated $50 out of its General Fund, besides placing a purse of $23.50 in his hands, which had been collected from the citizens of this locality by our Foreman, and to which the members of the Lodge contributed a fair proportion, R. D. Hume, proprietor of the mill where the injury was received, kindly tendering a free passage, by steamer, to and from San Francisco. The Lodge also appointed a committee to take charge of the case, and he was placed aboard the steamer as speedily as circumstances would admit of, and one of said committee took passage in the same vessel, and attended to the brother's wants during the voyage, and with the assistance of our District Deputy, who was in the city at the time, had him transferred to the hospital, expending $2.50 for hack fare; paying $40, in advance, for four weeks board and treatment, and placing the balance—$7.50—in the brother's possession, making in all $73.50 contributed for his benefit, by his own Lodge and citizens of this place, up to that time. So much for the statements—"I came to this place," "I went to the hospital, etc."

During the evening our District Deputy attended a meeting of Valley Lodge, and there called the attention of its members to the brother's situation, and fortunately a member of the Relief Committee being present, the name of the brother, and the name, number and location of the Lodge to which he belonged, was taken down, with the assurance that he would be visited and looked after. The next day our District Deputy called on the ailing brother, informing him of what he had done, and learned that the Committee had been true to their promise, having already visited him, and made provision for regular visits each day thereafter. So much for the Committee "finding out" the case "by means not known to me." In the meantime, Del Norte Lodge, No. 183, of Crescent City, learning of the brother's misfortune, had started a subscription for him, on which was raised amongst themselves and the citizens a purse of $38.25, which was placed in his hands just prior to his departure for the hospital; and the same Lodge subsequently contributed $38 additional for the same purpose, which amount was duly forwarded; and more recently a few of the mill people, where the injury was received, placed in our hands for the brother $39.25, one-half the amount contributed by them for the mutual benefit of Brother Deo and L. Lockwood (not a member of the Order), who are both sufferers by the same accident. To this latter sum was added a balance of $3, contributed by Del Norte Lodge, and the total amount increased to $50 by contributions from our own members, and forwarded Dec. 18th, making an aggregate of $200 furnished for the disabled brother's benefit; besides, the Lodge assumed and is paying his dues and assessments, and had under consideration measures for still further aid at the time this publication made its appearance, producing astonishment and not a little indignation at the evident lack of appreciation of the efforts made in his behalf. For the members of the Relief Committee we have a high regard, and bid them God-speed in their noble mission; and while we believe the objects of its formation most desirable and praiseworthy—supplying a hitherto and doubtless hereafter, much needed want—and while we are informed it has done much for the comfort and bettering of the condition of our disabled member, which favors we heartily appreciate, and for which we feel truly grateful, yet we are indisposed to permit it, or anyone else for it (nor can we believe its members would knowingly tolerate such unfairness), to appropriate to itself credit that of right belongs to others. Hence this communication.

There are other objectionable features connected with the publication herein criticized, but in charity we forbear, regretting the necessity for saying thus much, but feeling that in justice to ourselves, and particularly to the members of Del Norte Lodge and the other friends outside of the Order, we could not say less.

Yours in C., H. and P.,
O. V. WALLACE,
Recorder North Star Lodge.

P. S.—I will add that the foregoing response to the article referred to has been submitted to our Lodge in open session, and by vote unanimously approved. O. V. W. Smith River, Jan. 7th.

As to the merits of the dissatisfaction existing between Brother Deo and North Star Lodge, we have no further to say. We insert the foregoing because it refers to what we have published before, and which to the minds of North Star Lodge seems to demand the attention given, the communication coming unanimously, as it does, from the Lodge. The less said about our difficulties in print the better, brethren, is the motto of the WATCHMAN, and we are glad we can point to the fact that no fraternal paper so long published ever had less of fraternal strife in its columns than our journal. One of the strongest advantages of our Order is its secrecy, and the advantage of being able to settle our difficulties harmoniously, away from the public gaze.

Result of the Prize Poem Contest.

As will be seen by reference to another column, the prize of a $25 order on Taber, the celebrated photographer, for the best poem on "Fraternity," sent us for Washington's Birthday edition of our paper, has been awarded to Mr. Sam. Booth, of this city. This decision has been arrived at by competent and impartial judges, after a very careful comparison and study of the relative merits of the various poems submitted. This poem needs no encomium from us. Its fine conception, broad, generous tone and ringing lyrical strains, speak for themselves. At the same time there were others which pressed it so closely for the supremacy that we cannot forbear giving merited praise to the best of them and a substantial reward. While nearly all submitted were of a high order of merit, those submitted by "M. S. Colusa," and "131," of this city, are so good that we feel like extending our rewards. If their authors will allow us to publish them in subsequent issues, either under names or nom de plume, we will give them like orders on Taber for $15 and $10 respectively, otherwise said offer to fall to the next in order. We know of no prizes that we can offer that will be more appropriate, or more highly prized, than the gems of art turned out from the noted establishment of Taber.

Oakland Improvements.

It is a common observation that we know more about a strange city, in which we have sojourned a few days, than the one in which we live. Curiosity sleeps at home, but is wide-awake and vigilant abroad. Busy with our temporal affairs and domestic duties, pacing, as regular as clock-work, the way to shop, office or store, we may be little aware of the growth, activity and expansion going on all around us. Many years ago the President of a Lecture Association in Dixon, Ill., called upon Horace Greeley, who had come to town to fill an engagement with it. Greeley instantly fastened upon him as a leech, to suck out all the local information he possessed. He asked about the growth of the place, the number of children in the public schools, the amount of grain that had been raised in the county, etc. The leader of a literary club afterwards confessed his mortification at finding out how little he knew of matters in his own vicinage when subjected to Greeley's rigid catechizing. Greeley looked at him with disgust, for he had no use for a man he could glean nothing from. There may be many people in Oakland who would be surprised on looking closely into the matter to find out how rapidly the city is stretching away for miles in every direction—creeping along the valleys and dotting the hill slopes and mountains with beautiful homes, lawns, gardens, orchards and vineyards.

It is peculiar to California climate that the winter months do not arrest building operations as in the East. When the people make up their mind to build, the contract is let without any regard for the season, the material is soon collected, and the man who passes by a vacant lot one week may find a dwelling-house on it the next. Those who only know the city from a Sunday drive over the hills to Piedmont, along the Fruit Vale road or down Telegraph avenue to Temescal may not be apprized of the number of new buildings springing up all over the city. The small of fresh paint is everywhere. And yet there are not enough houses to go round, and cozy little cottages are in great demand.

While Oakland is no longer a mere suburb of San Francisco and has laid deep and broad the foundation of a separate business and commercial center, and will at no distant day be a formidable rival for a share of the expanding commerce of the Pacific, still it is undoubtedly true that a very large portion of our population are attracted here from sanitary, social and economic reasons. They are charmed by the healthy and exhilarating climate and picturesque surroundings. They find the educational privileges, from the Kindergarten to our magnificently endowed University, unsurpassed. Cheap ferriage is no small consideration. The time schedule of the Broad Gauge Ferry is arranged to meet the convenience and caprice of the traveling public, the officials are careful and obliging, the boats elegant and commodious, and the new passenger depot at the end of the Oakland pier not only a model of architectural beauty, but unrivaled for its safe and convenient facilities for ingress and egress. The Narrow Gauge people also are sparing no pains to make their transit to San Francisco all that could be desired. Their cars and boats are of the best; and the public will be glad to learn that they expect to have their new pier complete by the first of March, and will then run their local trains every half hour. Now if these two companies will agree to split their division of schedule time so as to run cars and boats alternately every fifteen minutes, and recognize each other's tickets, like the comity existing among the street railroad companies, the traveling facilities between Oakland, Alameda and San Francisco would be brought as near perfection as is possible. This is a "consummation devoutly to be wished," and we know we voice the sentiment of the community in making the suggestion.—Oakland Tribune.

Examine Your Subscription Labels.

To avoid possible mistakes, and to make it plain for every subscriber to see that his subscription is properly credited on our list, we have taken much pains, at considerable expense, to print plainly the dates to which each has paid on their address label. We urge all to carefully examine the same, and if any possible error has occurred against (or in favor of) any subscriber that they be sure to notify us BY LETTER without delay. We use our best efforts to have our list entirely correct, but if mistakes occur we shall be very glad to correct them, and that at once. When payments are made, to agents or otherwise, do not fail to let us know without delay if prompt and correct credit is not given. Clerks and agents are liable to be changed, and it is for the interest of the subscriber and the office that speedy notice be sent of any errors that may occur in dates, names, spelling, etc. If any paper is sent beyond the time desired, by all means notify us BY LETTER, duly addressed and stamped. Otherwise the subscriber will be in duty bound to pay for it as long as it is sent. You can depend upon it the office will not intentionally continue the paper beyond the time desired.

One Flag Over All.

[SELECTED.]

Columbia welcomes to her doors
The Gentile and the Jew,
And finds a home upon her shores
For men of every hue;
She asks not what their creed may be,
Nor if in prayer they fall;
Yet while she gives them liberty,
One flag must cover all.

The Christian may enjoy his creed
Beneath the stripes and stars,
The heathen praise his wooden God
And Juggernaut his cars;
All freely here may meet in peace
In freedom's ample hall,
And all rebellious wars must cease—
One flag must cover all.

The petty flags of clique or clan—
Of feuds of foreign birth,
Should not insult the hope of man—
Our flag—the best on earth;
Let faction's banners pass away,
Nor prove fair freedom's pall;
Oh! heed Columbia's words to-day—
One flag must cover all!

"Fraternity and Money."

Synopsis of the Address Delivered by Grand Master Workman Rogers of the
A. O. U. W., on his Southern Tour.

The most positive atheism does not deny the doctrine of cause and effect, while the whole structure of Christianity rests therein. It is recognized by all men. The flower blooms, the silver brooklet and the mighty ocean move, the sun shines, the ray of light pursues its ceaseless journey, in compliance with the injunction of the Divine Being, who has prepared a space greater than the suns that dwell therein. There is universal fraternity in the realms of matter. This law asserts her sway and bears her scepter into the dominion of mind. Tears are born of sorrow and smiles originate in some creating joy. All mental efforts are the offspring of some power in the soul. The soul is not exhausted by such labor. The sculptor's design is short of the conception of his mind. All human labor is imperfect. Our grandest thoughts never take tangible shapes. The ideal entrances our senses and lets us catch a glimpse of the radiant lining of the clouds, but spurns to be chained to the earth in our forms of iron, stone and wood. Angelo's soul contained a pile more splendid than was typified in St. Peter's dome. In Henry's mind, when he defied King George in his outburst, "Give me liberty or give me death," there was doubtless a more sublime thought, but one so high that none but the angels might express it. To this general law there is to be attributed the dependence of man upon his fellow-creatures. Man is a small factor in

The World's Progress.

Civilization does not depend upon one man's knowledge, but upon the treasures of a thousand years. In this building there is a condensation of humanity's history. No one man has ever delved for the iron, cement and paint, or searched the forest for the wood and partially wrought out the process by which the crude materials have been moulded to utility. This knowledge is the gleaming of ages. The greater the cause, the greater the effect. In all large undertakings therefore, the power of numbers has been brought to their accomplishment. San Francisco is but 34 years old and every man on this coast has been paying out from his muscle and brain a tribute to her grandeur. In earlier days the liberty of individual action was more restrained than now. The tyranny of kingcraft and the intolerance of priestcraft forbade the free exchange of thought. Investigating minds met in secret, veiling their teachings in symbols, since denial of rights claimed by the ruler was treason and dispute with the tenets of religion was heresy. Through such rigor were secret Orders created. Venerable in an antiquity reaching back to Solomon, standing like a prophetess when the Chaldeans gazed at the wondrous Star in the East, holding mastery in the heart of man when Attila swept the Roman eagle from Europe, creating and controlling in part the Crusades, the Order of Masonry stood, nay, it stands to-day a solemn and active reality, crowned with unquestioned originality and dressed in the habiliments of hoary centuries. It has held the passions in check and burned in every land the

Incense of Brotherly Love.

Masonry was not an accident, but a demand for more light. Man organized in his distress. The dispensing of alms was only incidental. Masonry came with a message of love, to give a broader range to mortal destiny.

The ages rolled on and other demands came. Man is ever changing. What to-day still his panting heart is to-morrow an idle memory. As we change our architecture, our dress and our viands, so we change our hopes and thoughts. Or, perhaps, it might be better to say, with our intellectual advances come new wants. One of these was supplied by Odd Fellowship. The laboring masses demanded protection against accident, sickness and death. The lack of systematized charity in Masonry and the poverty of the Church presented a field. Its system and objects give it an immediate passport to popularity, and within 65 years it has redeemed its every pledge and paid out $35,000,000 in benevolence. Thus humanity has been the recipient of its varied charities, and been taught that life is a noble probation, wherein there is a drama whose unfolding scenes will carry us beyond the tide and into the realms of spirit. With half a million of members and its solemn scene under every sky, Odd Fellowship stands the sole rival of Masonry. Yet there is no antagonism, each having its own field, its own methods and its own history. But with the fleeting years there came

Another Need

Caused by the manifest deficiencies of both the extortions of insurance monopolies. The insurance companies stood with their Shylock bond, waiting for the pound of flesh. The time was ripe for deliverance. When humanity has a need, some means are always found equal to the emergency. The Colonies wanted a leader and Washington responded. The abuses of the age produced a Luther for their reformation. Europe looked for a West and a Columbus discovered America. Capital called for swifter communication, and Franklin and Morse chained the lightning. Fulton solved a commercial problem with the steamboat, and the ox cart of a pioneer yielded to the railroad car of a Stephenson. The world wanted an example of self-government, and this nation appeared, with a constitution in one hand and the sword of protection in the other. The thrones of the East are tottering, and individual human rights will yet be crowned triumphant.

In obedience to this great law of supply came the master mind of an Upchurch, who presented the A. O. U. W., the grandest conception of our age, because it blends the two distinguishing traits of our time—money and fraternity. Money is laying down ocean cables, tunneling the Alps, cutting the Suez and Panama canals, building railroads, erecting cities and planting the earth with homes. Fraternity is supporting our schools, maintaining the churches, founding hospitals, sending its missionaries, framing the laws, dictating the judicial decisions and enforcing a myriad of the courtesies and moralities of life unnoticed by our Courts. The Workmen's organization illustrates both of these traits daily. Let us briefly review

Its Early History.

At Meadville, Penn., in October, 1868, Jefferson Lodge, No. 1, A. O. U. W., with J. J. Upchurch, its first Master Workman, was established. Its objects were stated to be to unite all mechanics for defense against encroachments, to determine the merits of mechanical inventions, to oppose "strikes," except as a last resort, to discuss municipal, State and national laws, to elevate labor and advocate the eternal truth that the interests of capital and labor are equal and should receive equal protection. On Oct. 6, 1869, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, with Father Upchurch as its first Grand Master Workman, was organized and at that session he presented and had adopted the insurance beneficial plan. Thus the sole object was to benefit mechanical labor. Since that time, its policy has broadened. With no relation to creed or calling, it is founded on the two eternal truths that God exists and created man, and that "usefulness to ourselves and others" is an inflexible duty. Its present aims are to give protection to all classes of labor, mental and physical; improvement of wholesome precepts and admonitions and fraternal aid, and to inspire a due appreciation of the realities and responsibilities of life. It also aims to create a fund for use during sickness or other disability, and in case of death to pay to such person or persons as may be designated by each member the sum of $2,000. These objects are accomplished though

Its Secret Work.

The objection to secret Orders are not well founded. The leading citizens of every neighborhood may be found in them. Our distinguished men belong to these Orders. Washington was a Mason, Garfield an Odd Fellow and President Arthur is a Workman. Secrecy is preserved in all relations of life. The first rapturous kiss my critic-friend ever received was doubtless in secret, and the recollection is sweeter than the honey of Hybla. Courts try certain cases with closed doors. Legislatures and Congress have executive sessions. Secret Cabinet meetings are held; Protestantism and Catholicism have their secret meetings, and the Pope is elected through a secret Convention of Cardinals. Is all this wrong? The Workmen's Order invites every white man over 21 years of age and under 50 to its altars if he be of good health and morals and capable of earning a living. It tries to gather the good only, but as into other places, the corrupt sometimes creep in. The Order has paid out $8,000,000 as death benefits, and in this State for the last year her benefactions aggregate $266,000. On this coast they reach nearly $1,000,000 since organization. The sum of $2,000 is no mean one, for if the wealth of the State and nation were divided according to the communistic idea, the amount allotted to each would be about $500. The cost of maintaining the policy is about one per cent or $20 per year.

Other Advantages.

Its moral, social and intellectual advantages were dwelt upon at length. There is one peculiar virtue of Workmanship commending itself to the thoughtful—intemperance is a cause for rejection and justification for expulsion. Our Order is growing. She has gradually established herself in every State in our country and Canada, and set her seal upon the best blood in our land. With no salaried officials but the Grand Recorder in each Jurisdiction, and with all her money, except one dollar for each member safely stored in the Subordinate Lodges, she is cheap in her running expenses and will carry her $260,000,000 of benefits, inspired solely by a heaven-born fraternity. Our Order has been the Promethean fire from which all our sister organizations of similar design have drawn their warmth. And now, in conclusion, allow me to say that the hope of immortality is deeply implanted in my heart. Oft has my fancy painted the condition of those who consciously realize the spirit's freedom. And that future life for which the passionate heart of humanity sighs is robbed of its supremest joy if the memory of the earthly past and a perception of the present are not granted to the disembodied spirit. If, then, the disenthralled spirits of our brothers can look down upon us, oh what a joy must radiate everywhere until each celestial face shines as though touched by a light divine. From that unfading clime they can see the Order in her majesty, beautiful as the Pantheon, substantial as the Pyramids. They can see

Our Widows Guarded

From want by a Workman's charity and our orphans surrounded by a Workman's protection; our members with hope on their emblem supporting the supremacy of law and listening to the silver voice of mercy. For in the language of a Crittenden: "When God conceived the idea of man's creation he called to him the three ministers that constantly wait around the throne, Justice, Truth and Mercy, and thus addressed them: 'Shall we make man?' Then Justice made answer and said: 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will trample on thy laws.' And Truth made answer also and said: 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will pollute thy sanctuary.' But Mercy, dropping to her knees and looking up through her tears, said: 'Oh, God! make him and I will watch over him with my tender care through all the dark paths he may have to tread.' Then God made man and said unto him: 'Oh, man! thou art the child of Mercy; go deal with thy brother.'"

EQUANIMITY AND LONG LIFE.—Will a man live longer by keeping his mind in a state of equanimity? One of our physicians says: "He who strives after a long and pleasant term of life must seek to attain continued equanimity, and carefully avoid everything which too violently taxes his feelings. Nothing more quickly consumes the vigor of life than the violence of the emotions of the mind. We know that anxiety and care can destroy the healthiest body; we know that fright and fear, yes, excess of joy, becomes deadly. They who are naturally cool and of a quiet turn of mind, upon whom nothing can make too powerful an impression, who are not wont to be excited either by great sorrow or great joy, have the best chance of living long and happy after their manner. Preserve, therefore, under all circumstances, a composure of mind which no happiness, no misfortune, can too much disturb. Love nothing too violently; hate nothing too passionately, fear nothing too strongly." No doubt this is in the main correct, but a too quiet life is also unfavorable to the best health.

THE Engineer of a recent date says: The whole of the network of the Belgium telegraph will be appropriated for telephonic communications within a period of four months.

The World's Fair.

An Address to the Public.

To the People of California:—The holding of a "World's Fair" at San Francisco in the year 1887 is the fixed resolve of the people of California. As natural, the city of San Francisco takes the lead in arranging the preliminaries, and calls upon her citizens to take the initiative in what must be regarded as a somewhat ambitious undertaking, and not to be entered upon without due consideration, and when inaugurated to be prosecuted with resolute determination. In order that this enterprise may be successfully carried out, it is proper to say that at the public meetings already held, under the authority of his Excellency, George Stoneman, Governor of California, and presided over by him, there has been appointed an Executive Committee of prominent citizens of the State, who are charged with the details necessary to inaugurate the work intrusted to them. In pursuance of this duty the Executive Committee would have our citizens, and all classes of them within the territorial area to be benefited, fully impressed with the advantages that would accrue from holding a national and international fair in San Francisco. Our geographical position in reference to our own country, as well as toward the Oriental nations, renders this place a most appropriate one for an international exhibition. It will bring together strange peoples, introducing the native races of the Russian, Indian and Chinese empires with the various races that populate the Indian and Pacific oceans, introducing them to American and European families. This is suggestive of a more intelligent and generous feeling than now exists between these different nationalities, aids to break down old traditions and destroy new prejudices, and may be the opening up of more intimate relations and a more friendly intercourse than now exist. By the exhibition of agricultural and mechanical productions it will stimulate not only the commerce that exchanges, but will mutually educate the producers. The arts and industries of the New World will profit by observing the results of the older civilization, while the Old World may be profited by the inventions and enterprising achievements of the younger nations. Our empire of the Pacific, embracing all those States and Territories contiguous to our coast, will reap the benefit of the double observation, and in turn we are afforded the opportunity of presenting the last group of civilized States to the observation of both hemispheres. We need not particularize the advantages to all our business men and men of wealth to arise from a successful "World's Fair." All who are intelligent will appreciate the benefits that will accrue to us from the successful prosecution of this undertaking.

The Executive Committee, to which has been intrusted the inauguration and management of this work, have determined, as necessary to demonstrate the earnestness of our own people in the premises and as a guarantee to ultimate success, and as an evidence of our willingness to show our confidence before we ask the aid of the general, State or municipal government, or before an appeal to the generosity of those beyond our own borders, to obtain a subscription of half a million of dollars, upon conditions which will be more fully made known at the time subscriptions are solicited by the Finance Committee, which will be organized and enter upon active duty in the premises on Monday, March 3, 1884.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SIMPLE AND COMPOUND ENGINES ON SHORT ROUTES.—Mr. Boulvin has determined a series of formulas expressing the relations between size of vessel, weights carried and distances traversed, and the weights of the simple and the compound engine, and finds that, for short routes, the best form of engine is the single cylinder rather than the compound. He finds that for lines from twenty to sixty miles in length, as those from Dover to Calais and from Ostend to Dover, a gain of a knot an hour may be obtained by the use of the simple engine instead of the compound, in consequence of the saving in weight of machinery. On long routes the economy is on the side of the compound engine, in consequence of the saving in weight of fuel. The later practice of English constructors has been in accordance with this result, and with the principles involved in the work of Mr. Boulvin. He constructs curves showing the equations graphically, and illustrates their use by examples.

Progress of Secret Societies

Twenty years ago, or prior to the close of the late war, secret societies were comparatively few in this country. The Masons, Odd Fellows, Red Men and one or two other Orders had been long established and their growth and influence had extended far and wide throughout the Union, long before the Southern States seceded. But as soon as the war was over numerous secret societies, all having fraternity for their corner stone, sprung into existence, until now they may numbered by the dozens; and it may be interesting to inquire why this prolific growth of secret Orders was deferred until the close of our civil war. We can account for it in no other way except on the theory that the war and its dreadful consequences afforded an opportunity for thousands of men to witness the import and power of a pledge of true friendship between man and man. There were Masons, and Odd Fellows, and Red Men on opposite sides in the war, as well as father against son and brother against brother. The former was as firmly bound by a pledge to alleviate each other's wants and sufferings, as were the latter by the tie of blood relationship. Soldiers looked on, and saw strangers made brothers on the battle field, and wondered what sign of recognition they carried about them. It was the sign of humanity—the exemplification of true fraternal humanity. If a true history of all the incidents of that war could be written, there would be many repetitions of the story of Damon and Pythias.

It was the good done by secret societies during the war and witnessed by hundreds and thousands of men, that prompted the institution of so many new Orders soon after peace was declared. And we are among those who believe that fraternal secret Orders are a blessing to society and a good thing for the country in general. Like churches, they have a salutary influence on society wherever they flourish. There was a time in the history of the world when there was but one church organization, but it was not a period of advanced civilization and enlightenment; on the contrary it was a period when superstition and ignorance had full sway. Hand in hand with the advance of civilization and progress have marched the establishment of new churches; and with the growth and development of secret societies we find mankind becoming more and more benevolent, charitable and humane.

The numerous public installations of officers of secret Orders held throughout the country since the beginning of the new year, show that there is a lively rivalry existing between them. These public installations are given with the view of making the public acquainted as far as possible with the aims and objects of the different orders. And it is to be hoped that they will have a tendency to dispel much of the prejudice existing in the minds of some people against secret Orders, for the opposition is founded solely on prejudice and utterly without reason. But civilization and enlightenment are too far advanced at the present day for such prejudices to have any very firm hold or disastrous results on the progress of secret societies.—Galt Gazette.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL PROJECT.—Washington dates of January 20th, say: Friends and promoters of the Nicaragua ship canal, both here and in Nicaragua, feel sore over the practical failure of that enterprise, so far as this country's control in it is concerned, and ascribe it to the selfish opposition of Captain Eads on the one hand and rival railroad interests on the other. Whatever the reason, lacks of success is evident and must be accepted as a fact. The Nicaraguans do not despair, however, of yet fulfilling their scheme of a canal, and are seeking the necessary aid abroad. Meanwhile M. de Lesseps, according to all reports, is going ahead with his ditch at the Isthmus of Panama, and that genius at digging may yet show the world how simple a thing it is to accomplish an impossibility, provided the right man sets about it in the right way.

Rowell—Proby—Lyon.

The illustrious trio whose names form the caption of this article are an unenviable lot. They are living witnesses of the folly of attempting to swindle a beneficiary Order.

While we think it barely possible for a man to feign death and secure the payment of his benefit, in one of our leading societies, yet we venture to say that either of the unsavory three, whose attempts have been so disastrous, would bear us out in the assertion that the operation is attended with great difficulty. In fact, we doubt if the thing can be successfully done, unless by collusion with the officers of the Lodge, or through some official neglect.

Rowell, it will be remembered, was a member of the Royal Arcanum and left his family at Bath, N. Y., going to Niagara Falls in February, 1881, where he went through the form of being drowned. When a detective discovered him in Western Ohio, several months afterward, he disclaimed any intention of defrauding the Order, asserting that he simply left his wife for reasons best known to himself. The Order saved $3,000 by using due precaution before paying out the money.

Now, comes Proby, of Texas. The scene of his drowning (?) was on the coast of California, in the treacherous breakers of the Pacific, where storms, devil fish and sea-weed unite to render escape well nigh impossible. In August, 1882, he disappeared and did not turn up until recently, but just in time to save the K. of H. $2,000.

There has previously been published an interesting account of the case of Lyon, who held a membership in the A. O. U. W., and concluded to "shuffle off" before his time, that his friend Crenshaw might realize on the benefit certificate. But, although the plans were nicely laid and nearly accomplished, he also came to grief. His sad death on a scaffold, or rather from "falling from a scaffold" in Kentucky, last June, had the merit, at least of novelty, as compared with his predecessors in the art of dying. Rowell and Proby chose watery graves, while Lyon selected a less romantic ending of his mortal career. The A. O. U. W. are just $2,000 ahead in the transaction.

These famous cases must serve to put all the Orders on their guard, so that the closest scrutiny of every suspicious death may be had before the benefit is paid. We imagine that it will be some time before another attempt is made.—Royal Arcanum Journal.

HOW TO CHOOSE AN AXE.—The Eau Claire, Wis., Free Press has the following: Contrary to the general supposition, the axe is an instrument of skill, and the expert axman looks as closely to the fitness of the bevel of his blade, the form of his helve, the length and shape of blade and pole, and the weight of his axe for the purpose contemplated, as the fencer to his foil. The weight of an axe, says an experienced Eau Claire logger, is arbitrary, and dependent upon the choice of the axeman for the purpose intended. If the object to be cut is small timber, which may be severed at from one to half a dozen blows, an axe with a long, thin blade, and as little bevel as is compatible with strength, is chosen, and at every stroke the blade is buried to the helve. Another Chippewa lumberman says if the purpose be to fell large trees or cut heavy timbers, and this same axe is used, it bites deeply in its strokes, but the chip remains in the timber after the incisions, and many more blows are required to dislodge it than were necessary to its formation; therefore, for this purpose, an axe having a thick, heavy bevel, and cutting much less deeply, is selected. The bevel, now acting as a wedge, forces out the chip at the same stroke by which the incision is made.

A CIRCULAR SAW was recently sent from N. Y. to a Michigan match company, which was six feet in diameter. It has fifty-two teeth and makes 672 revolutions per minute, and is capable of making a ten-inch to twelve-inch cut with each revolution. It can saw off a forty-foot plank, therefore, in an infinitesimal portion of a minute. This is not a solid saw, but is one of the new patterns, in which the teeth are separate from the plate and can be inserted and removed at pleasure. The teeth in the sort of saw of which this monster is a specimen, are little curved bits of steel pointed like chisels at the cutting end. They fit into round sockets cut out of the edges of the saw plates, and their little chisel blades project slightly beyond the circle of the plate.

"Good of the Order."

Brother Gardner of the Lime Kiln Club Gives His Views on "Purty Men" and Anti-Ingersollians as Members.

"If Clarence De Melville Bungs am present wid us to-night, I should like to spoke to him," said Brother Gardner as the meeting opened.

Brother Bungs was on the back row with a looking-glass in his hands and a new brand of hair oil on his hair. He rose up with a scrape and a bow, made a great spread of a blue silk handkerchief, and finally stood before the President's desk.

"Brudder Bungs," resumed the old man, "I reckon you am the purtiest member of the Lime Kiln Club. You puts ile on yer ha'r, wax on yer moustache, an' de perfume on yer clothes reminds me of de wild roses of Varginny. Yes, you am de purtiest an' sweetest one of de lot."

"Yes, sah," replied the brother, while his face betrayed the fact that he was tickled half to death.

"But—by de way, Brudder Bungs, what am your present business?"

"I'ze out of a job jis now, sah."

"When you work, how much do you aim?"

"As high as seben dollars a week, sah."

"Jist so. Am dat suit o' cloths all paid fur?"

"No, sah."

"An, you am how many weeks behind on yer board?"

"Not ober six, sah."

"An' you owe dis Lodge $3 dues?"

"Yes, sah."

"An' you owe members here as much as $20 fur borrowed money?"

"I'ze borrowed some, sah."

"Brudder Bungs, I'ze had some 'sperience wid purty men, an' I nebbber seed one yet who wasn't a fraud on de word manhood. When a man sots out to be purty, all de hoss sence leaves his head. No man kin labor and be purty too. He darfo' lets work alone. He peats his board, his tailor, his shoemaker, an' all his friends. He looks killin', an' smells like a cologne factory, but he doan' pay up. Every smile beats somebody out twenty-five cents, an' ebry giggle costs somebody half a dollar. I'ze had my eye on you fur some time."

"Yes, sah."

"Six months ago you had steady work, good pay, respectable cloths an' was outer debt. You sot out to be purty, an' to-day you wouldn't sell fur 'nuff to pay yer debts. You smell awful nice, but you owe a $26 board bill. Your ha'r curls beautifully, but de tailor am whistlin' fur his money fur dat suit. Your form am elegant, but you has borrowed money until nobody will lend you anoder cent. You smile like a buttercup, an' raise yer hat like a Chesterfield, but yer bates ain't paid fur!"

"I'ze gwine to squar' up, sah."

"Maybe you is, Brudder Bungs, but it is too late, so fur as dis club am consarned. Secretary!"

"Yes, sah."

"Scratch de name ob Brudder Clarence de Melville Bungs off de roll!"

"She's dun scratched, sah."

"Janitor!"

"Yes, sah!"

"Escort dis pusson to de alley doah! He am too purty to remain heah wid us. He am gwine out owin' us fur dues, an'—wall, nebbber mind."

There was no need to post the janitor. Every one could picture him as he cleared a space to swing his right leg, and if any body doubted that Clarence de Melville Bungs was lifted into the alley he had only to listen to the labored breathing of the janitor as he returned to his seat.

Elder Penstock arose to inquire if any member of the club had heard whether Bob Ingersoll was to lecture this winter or not. No one seemed to have heard anything about it, and the reverend member requested that the secretary be instructed to write to Ingersoll direct and ascertain.

"What am de object?" queried the president.

"I propose dat dis club takes steps to prove dat dar am a hereafter fur de soul."

"You do, eh? If de pusson who denies sich a theory am a fool, de pusson who sots out to prove what seben-eights of de world already believes, am nex' doah to an idiot. Sot down an' save your breafe!"

"But it am my dooty as a Christian man to controvert Ingersoll's argyments!"

"It am your dooty as a Christian man, to let Bob Ingersoll have all de rope he wants. If you has got de proper faith he can't hurt ya. If your faith won't stan' an attack den it am too weak to stan' alone. If, arter men and women have believed in God an' hereafter an' heaben fur 6,000 y'ars, a lawyer wid a snub nose an' a voice like a dog barkin' in a bar'l, kin come along an' scare 'em into fits, somebody had better go to work an' plug up de knot holes an' put new rivets in de jints."

THE notorious Billy McGlory of New York, convicted of violating the excise law, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for six months.

The Dashaway Hall Steal.

One of the most disgraceful affairs that has occurred for a long time in this city is the effort being made by the Trustees of the old Dashaway Hall quasi-fraternal, temperance organization, to line their pockets with the proceeds of the labor and contributions of fellow members. No language is strong enough to denounce such land pirates. It is something that could not well happen in a fraternal organization like ours or any of the older societies; but anything that should ever even mark the approach to such a culmination should be frowned down by all members who respect their Order and themselves. The following resume of the affair is taken from the Oakland Tribune:

Dashaway Hall, one of the old landmarks of San Francisco, and long the rendezvous of a branch of temperance workers and queer people with radical ideas to ventilate, has passed away, and the place that now knows it will know it no more forever. It now transpires that there has long been a silent scheme on foot, on the part of a few members of the Association to sell this valuable property and pocket the assets. The first step in the steal was to stop the growth of the membership. As three black balls killed an application this was easily accomplished, and five years ago the Hall ceased to be a recruiting station in the temperance work. Then the by-law, that all members who joined other temperance organizations, forfeited all right, title and interest in the property, was rigorously enforced, and considerably reduced the roll. A vigilant detective was hired to shadow suspected members about the city and convict them of violating their pledge.

In this way the membership was reduced to 48 about two years ago; the most active of the birds of prey finding that all their efforts still further to reduce the membership would be vain, concluded to consummate their scheme of plunder and divide among themselves a property, the accumulated result of the sacred gifts and donations of confiding temperance people who believed they were building a monument that would shed its blessings over future generations. Under the pretense of paying off a mortgage of $50,000 and resuming temperance work at another center the Trustees filed a petition in the Superior Court for a decree to sell the property. As it was bringing in an income of $700 a month, which after paying all expenses, would make an annual sinking fund of $7,500, and inasmuch as the mortgagees had offered to extend the mortgage which had still a year to run, at one-half the rate of interest, the petition had a suspicious look. The permission was granted, the property sold for $165,000, and after paying off the mortgage the net sum of about $105,000 remained. On the last night of the old year 30 members came together, not to hold watch-night, as in former years, not to bewail the spread of intemperance, but to run a divisor of 48 through $75,000, each taking his share of the quotient. There is still $30,000 in the bank, an object of lust and cupidity; some of these moral reformers want to steal it, and others are in favor of building a woodshed somewhere on Howard street, and renew the work of hurrying up the millennium, but the fate of the old fort on Post street will hardly inspire much confidence in the militant work of this branch of the temperance army.

MODERN ENGINEERING.—The new harbor of Trieste, which has lately been finished with great ceremony, is a remarkable piece of modern engineering. It has taken fifteen years' work, and has cost over $7,000,000. It consists of nearly two miles of quays, arranged to inclose three basins of eighty five acres of water surface, and these are protected by a 3,600 feet long seawall, running parallel with the shore and 1,000 feet from it. The work has been one of enormous difficulties, because of the unstable bottom, and it is stated that the walls, when once under way, sank gradually for a year, then suddenly slipped forward and out of sight. But the present walls have already withstood two of the greatest gales known in this century. The importance of this work to Austria must be very great. It is the chief seaport of the country, it has a large mercantile navy, and its exports foot $50,000,000 a year, and its imports $70,000,000. But its little harbor, constructed by Maria Theresa in the last century, has been entirely inadequate to its steadily growing commerce. No vessels of more than three hundred tons burden could come to its quays, and though larger craft could find generally safe anchorage in the outer roadstead, they have been exposed to danger from southerly storms. The new piers now make it possible for vessels of any size to find safe shelter in the harbor of Trieste.

Lodge Locals.

Preceding the lecture the audience were entertained with vocal and instrumental music by Brothers Baker, Barnes and Clark. Brother Harnden disclaimed the idea of giving any formal "lecture," but instead entertained those present very agreeably by a recital of reminiscences of a two years' sojourn in the Islands. These pertaining chiefly to the manner and customs of the people and the natural features of the Islands, were given in an easy, conversational manner, and were illustrated by a large map of this group. The lecture, which was listened to with close attention, and at its close applauded heartily, not only showed that Brother Harnden is a fluent and graceful speaker, but that he is a close observer, and did not fail to use his powers of observation to good advantage while an inhabitant of the wonderful island group known as King Kalakua's Kingdom.

LAKE COUNTY.

Anchor, No. 216.

We are glad to learn that this Lower Lake Lodge has become so far rejuvenated as to have given an entertainment and supper last Thursday evening. We await an account of it with interest.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

The Los Angeles Lodges.

From an exchange, we learn that Los Angeles, No. 55, and also Southern California, No. 191, are in a highly prosperous condition. No. 55 pays sick benefits to its sick amounting to $8.00 weekly after the first week. No. 191 pays a sick benefit of $6.00 weekly. Fidelia Lodge, No. 14, Degree of Honor, also pays a sick benefit, but we are not informed as to the sum. No. 14 has got into a way of its own, and a good way it is, too. Every fourth meeting is changed to a social and hop, sometimes with refreshments, and sometimes without, and the price of admission always low, but yet enough to cover expenses and leave a margin in their treasury. They send out invitation cards to worthy young people outside of the Order, and do a good work in advancing the welfare of our Order. The ladies of this Lodge made a proposition to buy a piano if the Order in this city would secure a hall of its own, but so far they seem backward in responding to this praiseworthy offer.

TULARE COUNTY.

Lone Sycamore, No. 163.

On the evening of January 8th, officers elect of the Lone Sycamore Lodge, No. 163, of Lemoore, were publicly installed by Dr. L. M. Lovelace, acting G. M. W., there being a large number of invited guests present. W. A. Grey was introduced as orator of the evening, and entertained the house with a carefully prepared and appropriate oration of twenty minutes length. At the close of the oration, all were invited to a bountiful supper in Erlanger's Hall, prepared by the lady friends of the Order, after which music and dancing contributed to the mirthfulness of the occasion till one o'clock, the hour for retiring, arrived. Subsequently on the 15th inst., this Lodge passed a resolution to the effect that a vote of thanks be tendered to the ladies who prepared the supper and otherwise aided in the festivities.

BROTHER JAMES H. BARRY, P. M. W., of Myrtle, a practical and energetic printer, has embarked in a new journalistic field. He is one of the publishers and proprietors of the Daily Evening Star, a spicy, newsy and independent sheet. A host of good friends sincerely wish him abundant success.

PERSONAL.—Charles Nelson Herring, foundrymen, formerly on Third street, this city, will hear of something to his advantage by applying to this office, or that of the Grand Recorder.

Worthy of Consideration.

In justice to the publishers, it is proper to say that the WATCHMAN, however creditable its appearance or valuable its enterprise to the Order, has never asked, expected or received any pecuniary patronage whatever from the Grand Lodge, a fact quite significant to all conversant with the history of ordinary fraternal publications.

We have relied for our recognition and advancement entirely on merit, and have asked no other pecuniary aid than that afforded from subscriptions and advertisements, including lodge cards. No subsidies have assisted us in any way. Whatever position the paper occupies has been reached by straightforward steps and not by assuming any dependent position. And this is one of the reasons why the WATCHMAN has received and retained the confidence so uniformly of the most active and sincere members of the Order, and consequently been so helpful in its aid of the true and continued harmony and success of the A. O. U. W. in this jurisdiction.

Liberal from the first in expenditures for the issue of a first-class journal, its proprietors have never yet netted a farthing of profit from this paper, but are yet hopeful that a superior publication will yet receive its due reward from an increased and prosperous fraternity.

While no unearned emoluments are sought for in the future, justice and our needs to make a paper always acceptable and as good as we desire to for the pride of the noble brotherhood we represent, calls for the substantial endorsement of the enterprise by every Lodge to the extent of advertising its card in our very complete and perfect Subordinate Lodge Directory, and we trust that some brother in the fractional number of lodges that have not yet patronized us will try and see that justice is soon done us in this direction in reward for our faithful labors.

LONE SYCAMORE, No. 163, Lemoore.—Jas. W. Beaver, P. M. W.; John Mangan, M. W.; Chas. Hackett, F.; Thos. Smith, O.; John H. Beaver, Rdr.; A. S. Mapes, Rvr.; D. Brownstone, F.; John Benton, G.; G. M. Potter, I. W.; Wm. Burlington, O. W.

WE trust that a correspondent for whose benefit we had a paragraph in last issue, concerning the means of keeping the Order in existence, will see on conclusion that we are right. It is not so much the interest accrued on deposits that keeps "regular" insurance companies alive, and pays their princely salaries, as it is the sums accruing from "lapsed policies." We recommend our Brother to read carefully some of the editorials on this subject written by Brother Barnes, of the Call, during the past year, and copied approvingly by the WATCHMAN.

THE J. T. ROGERS who is a candidate for Superior Judge of Mendocino county is Grand Master of the A. O. U. W., an able lawyer, eloquent speaker and big-hearted gentleman. We hope he will be elected.—Russian River Flag.

A DEGREE of Honor Lodge is being organized by Deputy George Jordan in District 1.

Is there any significance to be attached to the fact that our Grand Lodge this year is to convene on the first day of April?

FRATERNAL, BENEVOLENT AND BENEFICIARY SOCIETIES.—It is generally conceded that the growth, interest and general prosperity in these societies in our State is largely greater now than ever before. As showing the interest locally that is taken in these organizations, the popular halls in Shiel's building, O'Farrell street, near Market, forty-three of these societies meet in the seven different halls of the building, weekly. In this connection we may say that this building is one of the great resorts for this purpose. It is centrally located, richly furnished and upholstered, and under the able management of Mr. E. Peterson as agent, there is seldom or never any cause for complaint. Brother Geo. Dickson has had charge of Shiel's building since it was built (something over two years ago), whose close attention, and scrupulous care and accommodating ways have made him a great favorite.

A SUCCESSFUL FIRM.—Dalton Bros., who have been in business in San Francisco for the past 16 years, have marched gradually up from a small beginning to the front rank among the wholesale commission houses in the metropolis of the Pacific. They have removed from their old location and are now one block further toward Market street, their present location being Nos. 308, 310, Davis street. They occupy 50 feet front by 120 deep, first and second stories. This is the largest store in the line of fruits and produce in San Francisco. Bros. Frank and T. B. Dalton are well known as sagacious and reliable commission merchants. By strict integrity and close attention to business, Dalton Bros. have become widely known to the business people of this Coast, and secured a large and constantly increasing patronage. They have proved themselves successful business men, being energetic, careful and reliable in every respect, and deserve the success they have won.

AN EXTENSIVE BUSINESS.

We have noticed that I. R. Shaw & Co., 40 and 42 Sixth street, have one of the largest, if not the largest and most complete stock of boots, shoes and gloves in San Francisco. They have just issued a new price list containing over one hundred illustrations which they cheerfully furnish through the mail to all who may apply. Their country order business has grown to immense proportions, and they are now better prepared to fill orders from the country than ever before. Our readers will find it to their interest to send for the new price list, as it contains much valuable information. COM.

A VALUABLE REMEDY.

While so many deceptive decoctions are advertised as remedies, there is occasionally some article brought on the market which is bona fide—what it purports to be. One of the latter class is Dr. Henley's Colery, Beef and Iron, manufactured by Tathell, Cox & Company, at 537 Clay street. The three principal components of this remedy form a tonic for the blood, food for the brain; strengthens the nerves, and forms a nutritive and invigorator of the entire system. Well-known chemists and medical men attest the value of the preparation, and the thousands who have been benefited by it, give the best testimony of its worth. All who are suffering from ailments of the nerves, dyspepsia or loss of strength, should not fail to make daily use of this powerful remedy. We have tried it, and have heard so many speak of its curative virtues, that we know whereof we write, when we cordially recommend it.

Industrial Education in Oakland.

Report of the Committee of the City Board of Education.

The following is the report of the Committee of the Oakland Board of Education appointed to investigate and report with recommendations concerning the feasibility of attaching a scheme of industrial training to the Oakland public schools. Whatever may be the preconceived ideas of any one on this subject, it will do him no harm to study carefully this plan, as the result of months of thoughtful investigation at the hands of some of the ablest and most solid thinkers of the State. The report was adopted at the next meeting of the Board. The experiment, as outlined in the following plan, it seems to us is worth trying:

To the Honorable Board of Education, City of Oakland—GENTLEMEN:—Your committee appointed to consider the question of industrial education in the public schools of this city, present the following report for your consideration: By the terms of the resolution under which we were appointed, our duties were limited, first, to a thorough investigation of industrial education as applicable to the school department of this city; second, the devising of a plan whereby it might be incorporated in our curriculum should such a course be deemed advisable. In our investigations as a committee, we have made no haste to arrive at conclusions, but have carefully sought information from every available source at command. The larger number of our deliberations and meetings have been open to the public, and we have taken pains to invite before us for advice all persons either favorably or adversely inclined to the proposed change.

Meetings Held.

First, a meeting of the educators, capitalists and taxpayers was called in this room; next we invited the mechanics of Oakland to meet with us, and lastly, the ladies, and in conclusion Miss Corson was invited to exemplify her system of cooking in two separate lessons to a class of twenty young girls before the committee at the High School building. A third lesson upon the same subject was subsequently given at the same place by Miss Corson's assistant, Miss Ward. As a result of our investigations, we learn that industrial education, while comparatively a new subject to the people of this Coast, has been a most familiar branch of education among the older European nations, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Russia and France having adopted it in their public schools for several decades, and from them all comes an unbroken verdict of approval. For more than fifty years Germany has taught the rudimentary outlines of

Industrial Training

In her common schools, limiting the more specific instruction for the technical schools of her universities and cities. In Switzerland every boy, before leaving the public school, is taught the rudiments of some useful trade; and every girl receives instructions in the daily work and care of a household. Of late years France has paid great attention to industrial training. Having just opened several training shops in connection with the primaries of the city of Paris, the people were so well satisfied with the results obtained that additional shops were established, and now the system prevails in nearly all, if not all, the cities of the Republic. Your committee was unable to learn of definite experiments in shop work in England, but was informed that cooking and sewing have been incorporated in the schools of London. Of all European nations, probably none have given this subject more careful and systematic consideration than Russia, and there we find the results of long and expensive experiments, the outcome of which has been the development of a system known as the Russian system of industrial education, which has been adopted by

Nearly all European Nations.

The fundamental idea of the system is to impart to the child a general knowledge of the nature and use of all mechanical tools and the laws governing mechanics, and not the teaching of individual trades. This is in keeping with the general plan of public education throughout the world which aims at furnishing the child with the rudiments of all knowledge, and not perfect him in any educational branch. In other words, it is not sought to graduate from our public schools lawyers, doctors, ministers and scientists, but rather to equip our children with that general knowledge by the use of which they may, in the technical schools of the University, acquire such further knowledge as shall enable them to pursue any professional branch that they may select. So by the Russian industrial system it is sought to impart to the pupils not a trade, but such a general knowledge of the laws and practices of mechanics as shall enable them the more readily to acquire in other places an accurate knowledge of the trade desired, or render them the more useful and helpful citizens should they never adopt any trade whatever.

In the United States.

Your committee found that various schools of the character just described have been established for years past, all of which, so far as we have been enabled to ascertain, are giving satisfaction. Notably among them are the "Manual Training School," of St. Louis; the "School of Mechanic Arts," of Boston; the Worcester Industrial School, and something over 800 private and sectarian institutions. In the city of Boston the School Department has had for some two years a training shop for boys in connection with the Dwight School, and a resolution has recently passed the School Committee looking to still further accommodations in that direction. That city also maintains some 26 teachers of sewing, at a large annual expense, whose sole duty it is to instruct girls in needle-work. Another branch of this subject has engaged the attention of your committee, and that is the effect of this course of instruction on the physical and mental faculties of the children, and upon this we have been fully convinced that wherever it has been tried, even without lessening the work upon the ordinary school studies, it has conducted to both

Physical and Mental Activity.

In point of expense, we are satisfied that no large outlay of money need or should be made in this direction. The fitting up and furnishing of a workshop to start with would be all that in our judgment should be undertaken, and the sum of $800 or $900 would be sufficient to accomplish that and supply instruction and material for at least one year, or for two full terms. The instruction for girls might be limited at the beginning to cooking alone, which could be taught in at least five of the grammar schools at an expense of not to exceed $850 for the utensils, instruction and materials.

Recommendations.

We are therefore of the unanimous opinion, and do so report to you, that industrial education of the character just outlined should be taught in the public schools of this city, and would recommend that an experimental workshop be fitted up under the sheds of the Lincoln Grammar School, and supplied with the tools requisite for the instruction of two classes of twenty boys each, to be selected from the various grades of that or other schools, as may hereafter be determined; that an instructor, whose salary shall not exceed $5 per lesson, be employed to give two lessons each week of two hours each under the immediate supervision and guidance of Mr. Crawford, the Principal, and that the instructor be required to prepare a course of lessons which shall be combined with appropriate lectures upon materials—their character and adaptability to mechanical and commercial purposes and mechanic arts, and that such materials as the instructor may require be supplied by the Department.

Cooking Classes.

We would also recommend that the Board employ Miss Ward, lately the assistant of Miss Corson, at a salary not to exceed $60 a month, to give instructions in cooking, in five of the schools of this city, to be selected by the superintendent; two lessons of two hours each, to be given in each of the series of schools, once a week, to classes of twenty girls each, and that the department purchase such fixtures and materials as may be required, and provide the means of transporting them from one school to another as may be necessary. We would also recommend that all students in industrial training be selected from those boys and girls who shall volunteer, but that all scholars so volunteering shall be obliged to continue in the course prescribed for at least one full term, and that these instructions be required to maintain as prompt and regular attendance as possible, and conduct these classes with that same good order and decorum observed in other departments, giving each pupil proper credits for work done, and otherwise conforming to all the rules and requirements of the school regulations as applicable to other scholars. Respectfully submitted, CELESTIAL PHOTOGRAPHY. The first application of photography to astronomy was made in France. The first Daguerrian image of a heavenly body was that of the sun, which was taken by Fizeau and Foucault, April 2, 1845. Soon afterwards fine photographs of the moon were obtained, in the United States by Rutherford, and in England by Warren de la Rue. In many observatories photographs of the sun have been taken for twenty years, to facilitate the study of the spot and facule. More recently still, Rutherford and Gould photographed the stars, for the purpose of forming celestial charts, and Draper obtained a successful photograph of the great nebula of Orion. The large solar images, which have been obtained during the few years at Meudon, have revealed phenomena on the sun's surface which are invisible to the most powerful telescopes, and which open an entirely new field of research. By their aid we learn the true form of those elements of the photosphere about which so many different and contradictory assertions have been hazarded. In 1881, the first photograph of a comet with its tail was obtained at Meudon. It revealed curious details of structure and allowed divers photometric measurements, which showed that the tail, in spite of its apparent brilliancy, is from two to three hundred thousand times less luminous than the moon. The preservation of the images, the wide range of sensitiveness in the plates, and the faculty of embracing the most feeble as well as the most powerful luminous phenomena, lead Janssen to style the photographic plate the true retina of the savant.

folds to be indulged in. The close-fitting brim is lined with ciel-blue silk, only a glimpse of it being seen when the bonnet is assumed. The edge is outlined with gold beads, and the ribbon ties of the ciel are each fastened at the side with three small gold buckles placed at regular intervals and looking like mediæval ornaments. Just in front, a la militaire, is a group of ciel ostrich tips, some turning one way and some another after the approved nest-like effect. With an ordinary walking costume, such a bonnet would make one feel as if suitably dressed for most quiet affairs.

FIG. 5—Ladies' Bonnet.—This dainty bonnet, having a becoming suggestion of the poke shape, is of brown velvet. The brim is under-faced with a delicate shade of pink surah silk, laid on in soft folds drawn crosswise. On the right side is a cluster of ribbon loops—one side of the ribbon being brown velvet and the other pink satin. A parrot, dyed in brown tones, is on the left side, his plumage extending to the front and forming an effective trimming. Across the back extend the ribbon ties, which are each fastened at the side in a plait and then allowed to flare. They may be arranged close under the chin or low on the corsage, as most becoming; the first method being usually preferred.

FIG. 6—Ladies' Velvet Hat.—A hat that is usually worn off the forehead, and which may, if liked, have strings attached, is here shown. It is smoothly covered with dark green velvet, the under-facing matching the outer covering. Just in front are three feather pompons of a deep scarlet, with aigrettes of the same hue. The head of a cockatoo adds to the brightening effect, and is so placed that he looks as if he were tearing the feathers apart. If the complexion would allow it, orange or mandarin yellow might be substituted for the red tone, the result being greatly enhanced if the costume be trimmed with gold braid.

A Talk with the Boys.

Written by JOHN T. LAMONT.

While visiting our village school, a few days ago, we noticed that some of the scholars would fail in arriving at the right answer to simple problems at the blackboard. Of course, the whole question had to be reviewed, sometimes only to mix up the sum total more than the first attempt. In such cases the countenance seemed perplexed. But when the answer came straight by repeated struggles, the face would light up as if a hidden fire had just been kindled. The boy would take his seat, and eagerly watch others to see if they too made mistakes. Now, what is the moral of all this? The ordinary boy will say, "We know all this by experience." Hold on, my boy, did you ever carry your failures, your triumphs, into practical, every-day life? If not, let me remind you by comparison, so as to fix a principle of good upon your young and sensitive mind. You will perceive that the problem on the black-board was worthless as long as one false figure remained; when the true answer was found it could not be improved upon.

Suppose now, that a boy starts out in life with a clean record. Not one false step to mar the beauty of the spirit. When I speak of spirit, I mean conscience. That principle within you, which makes you feel good by being good, and also makes you feel bad when you do that which is wrong.

The page of life, then, is clean to begin with, like the sum on the blackboard when correct—it is perfect, so far as it is possible to make it. How do you go to work to mar and blur this clean page of life? All boys do not destroy this whiteboard just alike. Some will begin by slang phrases, others will go farther, and use profane language, each sentence or word adding to the dark page—a page which you cannot rub out as you do the chalk marks on the blackboard. I will not go deeper into the ways and means of blurring the problem of life—only make mention of tobacco, cards, liquor of all grades, evil thoughts, bad associates, and a love of evil rather than good. All this defileth the boy, wrecks manhood, and brings an entire failure in working out life's problem. You may figure correctly, you may cheat those around you, but the blur is within, the fair picture is defaced, and reflection anything but of a pleasant character.

We will now bring this to a practical test. Suppose you had ended your school duties. Life, with all its gold and glitter, before you. You have ambition to gain a name and fame; fortune smiled in the form of a small capital to begin with. But it would be necessary to establish your credit with the wholesale dealers of the Bay City. You state your circumstances to the head of the house. But in doing so, you use a slang word or a word bordering on an oath. Habit too strong to resist even in this trying time of youth's experience.

Do you suppose for one moment your request would be granted? Not so. That man of the world, with years of experience, could read your present and future just by that little wrong figure of speech, destroying the whole sum of confidence and giving a practical lesson which may be hard to learn after having defiled so often the bright page which nature gives to every child of its land.

This, then, I wish to impress upon your mind. If you wish to become a noble man you must begin life by being a noble one. Leave slang words to the vulgar; swear not, for each oath leaves its impress upon your sensitive soul. Utter no falsehood, for it is a wrong figure. Be honest. Let your yea be yea, and nay, nay. Use correct language amongst yourselves, and especially so to your superiors and the aged, and you will live respectably and respected, and die with a clean record.

The source of life will be correct, which will illuminate your countenance, surpassing the glory of the setting sun, and your memory held in reverence by all the good of earth.

Bird Migration.

There is now being made, over the whole extent of the country, an effort to secure wider and more accurate information on the migratory habits of birds. This is a subject intimately connected with practical agriculture as well as scientific interest. At the first congress of the American Ornithologists' Union, held in New York City, September 26 and 28, 1883, a Committee on the Migration of Birds was appointed. It is the purpose of this committee to investigate in all its bearings, and to the fullest extent possible, the subject of the migration of birds in the United States and British North America. The work will not be limited to the accumulation of records of the times of arrival and departure of the different species, but will embrace the collection of all data that may aid in determining the causes which influence the progress of migration from season to season. For example, severe storms, gales of wind, protracted periods of unusually high or low temperature (for the locality and time of year) are among the atmospheric conditions that are known to exert marked effects upon the movements of birds. The opening of the leaves and the flowering of certain plants, with the correlative appearance of a multitude of insects, are also among the actors that have to do with the abundance of many species. Hence the careful registration of certain meteorological phenomena, and of the state of advancing vegetation from day to day, will constitute prominent items in the record books of the observer.

For the purpose of rendering the result of the season's work as full and valuable as possible, the committee earnestly solicits the cooperation of every ornithologist, field-collector, sportsman and observer of nature in North America. Indeed, a large corps of observers is absolutely essential to the success of the undertaking, and the committee hopes to receive substantial aid from many who profess no knowledge of ornithology. Efficient service can be rendered by those familiar with only our commonest birds, and the committee will gladly accept data concerning any well-known species.

To cover the wide field, the territory of the United States is divided into thirteen districts, one of which is called the Pacific Coast District, and includes Washington, Oregon, California and Nevada, and the Superintendent of this division is L. Belding, of Stockton, Cal. The home of each observer is called a Station, and is recorded by number. All persons who are willing to aid in the work are requested to communicate with Mr. Belding, and they will be supplied with a circular describing in full what data the Union desires to obtain. The Chairman of the committee which has the whole subject in charge is C. Hart Merriam, of Locust Grove, Lewis Co., New York, who has pursued the study of ornithology with zeal and success for a good many years. We hope the Pacific coast will be fully represented in the interesting investigation which is proposed.

GREENLAND'S JOY MOUNTAINS.—Baron Nordenskjöld's official report shows that Greenland is not, as he had thought, a land of fertile interior valleys, protected by lofty coast ranges, but rises gradually, from the sea to a vast table-land in the center, which is simply a fathomless ocean of ice, from whose edges start rills that gather into torrents and rush through immense ice canyons of indescribable beauty and grandeur. Not a living thing was found save a worm, which lived in and on a metalline dust (of inscrutable origin) that formed muddy pools in the ice, which never froze over. The only vegetation was microscopic, and nourished by the same dust. Not a stone nor even a grain of sand was there; nothing (save this dust) except some form of water. The expedition was the first since the fifteenth century which had reached the eastern side of Greenland, and it found what seemed to be the remains of an old Norse colony.

THE BALLOON AS A TELEGRAPH MEDIUM.—A method of signaling by means of electric balloons has been successfully tried in Paris by M. M. Mangin and Baudet. The balloon, made of paper rendered translucent, was about eight feet in diameter, and was filled with pure hydrogen. A swan lamp was fitted inside, and a light rope carrying two copper wires was attached. When the circuit was completed, the whole balloon appeared to be a globe of fire. By switching the current off and on, the Morse code can be spelled out, by which communication can be carried on between distant points.

The Inventor's Wife.

It is easy to talk of the patience of Job. Humph! Job hed nothin' to try him; Ef he'd been married to 'Bijah Brown, folks wouldn't have dared come nigh him. Trials indeed! Now I'll tell you what—if you want to be sick of your life, Jest come and change places with me a spell—for I'm an inventor's wife. And sech inventions! I'm never sure when I take up my coffee-pot, That 'Bijah hain't ben 'improvin'' it, and it mayn't go off like a shot. Why, didn't he make me a cradle once that would keep itself a-rockin'; And didn't it pitch the baby out, and wasn't his head bruised shockin'? And there was his "Patent Peeler," too—a wonderful thing, I'll say; But it hed one fault—it never stopped till the apple was peeled away. As for locks, and clocks, and mowin' machines, and reapers, and all sech trash, Why 'Bijah's invented heaps of 'em, but they don't bring in no cash. Law! that don't worry him—not at all; he's the aggravatin' est man— He'll set in his little workshop there, and whistle and think and plan, Inventin' a Jew's-harp to go by steam, or a new-fangled powder horn, While the children's goin' barefoot to school, and the weeds is chokin' our corn. When 'Bijah and me kep' company he warn't like this, you know; Our folks all thought he was dreadful smart—but that was years ago. He was handsome as any pictur then, and he had such a glib, bright way—I never thought that a time would come when I'd rue my weddin' day; But when I've been forced to chop the wood, and tend to the farm beside, And look at 'Bijah a-settin' there, I've jest dopped down and cried; We lost the hull of our turnip crop while he was inventin' a gun; But I counted it one of my marcies when it bu'st before 'twas done. So he turned it into a "burglar alarm." It ought to give thieves a fright 'Twould scare an honest man out of his wits, ef he sot it off at night. Sometimes I wonder ef 'Bijah's crazy, he does sech cur'ous things. Hev I told you about his bedstead yit? 'Twas full of wheels and springs; It hed a key to wind it up, and a clock face at the head; All you did was to turn them hands, and at any hour you said, That bed got up and shook itself, and bounced you on the floor, And then shet up, jest like a box, so you couldn't sleep any more. Wa'al, 'Bijah he fixed it all complete, and he sot it at half past five, But he hadn't more'n got into it when—dear me! sakes alive! Them wheels began to whiz and whirr! I heerd a fearful snap, And there was that bedstead, with 'Bijah inside, shet up jest like a trap! I screamed, of course, but 'twa'n't no use. Then I worked that hull long night A-tryin' to open the pesky thing. At last I got in a fright; I couldn't hear his voice inside, and I thought he might be dyin'; So I took a crowbar and smashed it in. There was 'Bijah, peacefully lyin'; Inventin' a way to git out agin. That was all very well to say, But I don't b'lieve he'd have found it out if I'd left him in all day. Now sence I've told you my story, do you wonder I'm tired of my life? Or think it strange I often wish I warn't an inventor's wife?

TWENTY-FOUR O'CLOCK.—Referring to the plan of numbering the hours of the day from one to twenty-four, already partially adopted in some quarters, Mechanics says: An examination of some French publications of the fifteenth century discloses the fact that the manner of duplicating and marking the time from 1 to 24, representing the 24 hours of the day, was practiced as long ago as the date mentioned. A notable instance may be found in a work of that period containing a plate of a watch with the hours from 1 to 12 in Roman characters upon the outer rim of the dial, while upon the inner circle the hours from 13 to 24 are arranged in Arabic figures. The dial in question belonged to a watch in the famous collection of Prince Pierre Soltykoff. It was of gold and enamel, and of very elaborate workmanship. The age of the watch has not been absolutely ascertained, but from certain characteristics of movement it probably dates from about 1547.

COINAGE OF THE MINT.—The coinage of the San Francisco Mint during the last month amounted to $1,910,000, of which $1,660,000 was in double eagles, $200,000 in standard dollars and $50,000 in dimes. From July 1, 1883, to January 31st, the Mint's coinage amounted to $9,756,000, of which $6,040,000 were in double eagles, $416,000 in half eagles, $3,250,000 in standard dollars and $50,000 in dimes. In addition, the mint coined for the Hawaiian Government $300,000 in Hawaiian half dollars and $125,000 in Hawaiian quarter dollars last November and December.

CURE FOR CRAMP.—The simplest and best method, says the editor of the Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal, is a bandage applied above or below the knee, preferably the former.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS U. S. and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

WATER WHEEL.—Robert Hewson, S. F., Assignor to Globe Manufacturing Co., S. F., No. 292,431. Dated Jan. 22, 1884. This invention relates to certain improvements in water wheels or motors, and it consists of peculiarly formed buckets and a case having a diaphragm with inclined discharge holes so placed with reference to the wheel that the first impulse will be given by the motion of the water striking the front portion of the bucket, while the water escaping through the rear portion of the buckets gives a re-actionary force; and also in a manner for regulating and controlling the flow of water through the wheel. The wheel is designed for light work, such as driving sewing or other small machines, and the inlet pipe is intended to be screwed directly upon a common cock or faucet, the shaft thus lying horizontally and the belt from the pulley may lead directly to the machine.

CANNING APPARATUS.—Richard Wheeler, S. F. No. 292,080. Dated Jan. 15, 1884. This invention comprises an apparatus for putting up hermetically sealed goods of all descriptions, in which a reservoir and heater are employed with a series of separate inclosed chambers to contain the cans or ars and a means of supplying steam or hot air. The present invention consists in certain improvements in the chambers for retaining the jars or cans in a central position, in a shield or means for protecting the operator from the escaping steam when the door of the apparatus is opened, and in an exterior double walled case having openings in valves, through which hot air may be admitted around the inner chambers, so as to partially superheat the steam.

SHEEP ENUMERATOR.—Henry A. Shipp, Fresno city, Fresno county, No. 292,373. Dated Jan. 22, 1884. This is a peculiar device for automatically counting sheep or other animals. The object is to facilitate the counting of animals which herd together in large numbers, and to insure the accuracy of the count; also in selling a number of sheep a discussion may arise as to the accuracy of the count, and this necessitates a re-count which, in the ordinary method, causes delay and is scarcely more to be relied on than the first count. The animals, as they pass through a gate from a corral, strike jamb-flaps, on a "dodge-gate," by which recording mechanism is operated to record the passage of the animals passing through.

EDGER.—J. A. Robb, S. F. No. 290,358. Dated Dec. 18, 1883. This invention relates to certain improvements in that class of machines for resawing lumber into scantling, studding, etc., now known as "edgers." It consists of a means for raising and lowering the upper feed rolls and for controlling the mechanism by which this is done, and also of a means by which the feed rolls are connected so as to be driven simultaneously, notwithstanding the various distances to which they may be separated.

COOKING STOVE.—Robt. S. Burns, S. F. No. 290,316. Dated Dec. 18, 1883. This improvement consists in a double construction, with one shell within the other to provide a space between the two to receive the heat from the inner or fire chamber and conduct it to the ovens, and in certain return passages for the smoke and unconsumed gases, whereby they are subjected to a continued high temperature for more perfect combustion, together with secondary air supply passages and an arrangement of ovens.

WINDOW BLIND.—Joseph Williams, San Jose No. 291,254. Dated Jan. 1, 1884. The invention consists of a series of slats united by a flexible connection and sliding upon rods or guides upon which they are mounted, in such manner as to enable them to slide back and forth on said guides, and to turn from one position to a position at right angles to open or close the window. The object is to provide an easy-working and economical window blind.

CARTRIDGE-LOADING MACHINE.—Jonathan B. Richardson, Mountain View, Santa Clara Co. No. 288,740. Dated Nov. 20, 1883. This invention relates to a new and useful cartridge-loading machine, and it consists in the means for receiving and supporting the shell, and in the means for charging it with powder, wads and shot. The object of the invention is to provide a simple and effective machine for loading cartridges.

DIRT-SCRAPER.—C. Endicott, Kingsburg, Fresno county, No. 291,585. Dated Jan. 8, 1884. This scraper is for leveling land, and it consists in the arrangement of the bowl, wheeled axle, and the means for connecting them, the draft, and the means for dumping the bowl.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not. Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our member ship will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

REGULAR MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE:

Second and Fourth Saturday Evenings of Each Month,
AT 8 O'CLOCK.

A member of the committee will be in attendance each evening (Sundays excepted) from 7:30 to 8 o'clock, and on Sunday mornings from 11 A. M. to 12 M., for the purpose of receiving and attending to applications for Relief and Employment, and no application will be entertained outside of the above hours and place.

All communications and business connected with this committee should be addressed to the Secretary at the above permanent headquarters.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this the oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

Music Teaching.

MISS BESSIE VINNICOMBE, teacher of the pianoforte and vocal music, will give instructions at pupil's residence, when desired, and at Brayton Building, 363½ Twelfth St., near Franklin, Oakland, Cal.

Every Member of the A. O. U. W. Should Subscribe for the "Pacific States Watchman."

It is officially recommended by the Order on the Pacific coast.

Splendidly illustrated, reliable and chaste. The WATCHMAN is published semi-monthly—on the 1st and 15th of the month.

It is one of the best home and family papers on the coast and this feature commends it to all Workmen and all members of their families.

The subscription price is only $2 per year, payable in advance.

It is a worthy representative of the Order, a profitable companion for every member to read and consult, and a friend that each can take pride in recommending to readers everywhere. Its circulation has been of immense benefit to our noble Order and many of its individual members who read and patronize its many enterprising and sterling issues. All Workmen should lend it a helping voice and hand.

Advertisers will find it one of the best means of reaching a class of readers, including many Workmen and others who are large buyers in the aggregate.

Good Agents are wanted at all times, to whom large commissions will be paid.

SAMPLE copies sent free for circulation and examination with a view of increasing its subscription list.

A FABULOUS DISCOVERY.

Worth Millions to the Human Family—Celery as a Cure.

The habitual daily use of this vegetable is much more beneficial to man than most people imagine. The writer, who is familiar with its virtues, is acquainted with many men and women who from various causes have become so much affected by nervousness that when they stretched out their hands they shook like aspen leaves, but by a moderate use of celery they became as strong in nerve as other people. We have known others to be cured of palpitation of the heart. To this we may add that we received of Dr. Henley, of Portland, Oregon, a bottle of "Celery, Beef and Iron." By close analysis we state the preparation called Celery, Beef and Iron is what it is represented to be, absolutely pure, and every one engaged in labor weakening to the nerves should use "Celery, Beef and Iron." We find also according to the formula received, each bottle is composed of Liebig's extract of beef, extract of celery, and pyrophosphate of iron with condensed wine. These combined we pronounce the best known remedy for any disorder of the nerves or neuralgia. The most delicate nerves, even of birds, we give celery, how much better will it subserve the wants of the human family?—Prof. B. H. Openhelgen in Journal of Chemistry.

Not a Good Year.

We would rise to remark and stand up to explain that this will not be a good year for silver mining companies formed on the wildest plan. The feeling is again 'em. An old bull on Wall street, who has bought a little of everything ever sold on earth, was saying the other day:

"Gentlemen, if a man says silver stock to me he has got to die!"

"Don't you believe the prospectuses?"

"If President Arthur had his name to one, and General Grant, Jay Gould and Russell Sage guaranteed the stock worth twice its face value, I wouldn't pay ten per cent for it!"

"But there is paying silver stock."

"Possibly; but I should want to see the hole in the ground; I should want to go down the shaft; I should want to reach up and knock down half a ton of the stuff, carry it to the assayer, hold a cocked revolver to his head, and have his certificate written on parchment, before I would invest a dollar. Then, before I could credit the fact of a dividend, I should want some one to swear that I was sane, two others testify that I was sober, and a fourth man spike the money down to the table, so that it couldn't blow away."—Wall Street News.

ILLUSIONS.—All persons, even those in good health and of sound mind, are subject at times to illusions. The brain is a very delicately adjusted organ; is easily disturbed in its action by strong emotions, by furious passions, by indulgence in day dreaming or much novel reading or any intoxicating subject which too exclusively absorbs attention. But by keeping the head cool, and by avoiding unhealthy degrees of mental excitement, and devoting our time largely to practical subjects, and keeping the companionship of healthy, well-poised persons, and correcting our illusions by our judgment, we may overcome the evil habit and establish mental health, unless, as is often the case, they arise from diseased states of brain over which the person has no control.—Herald of Health.

What the Colors of Buoys Mean.

"On entering any harbor in the world," said a pilot to a San reporter, "where the channel is marked by buoys, you will find that those on your right as you pass in are painted red, and those on your left black. If you should see one painted in red and black horizontal bands, the ship should run as close to it as possible, because that indicates the center of a narrow channel. Buoys with red and black vertical stripes always mark the ends of spits and the outer and inner ends of extensive reefs, where there is a channel on each side. When red and black checkers are painted on a buoy it marks either a rock in the open sea or an obstruction in the harbor of small extent with a channel all around. If there are two such obstructions and a channel between them, the buoy on the right of you will have red and white checkers, and the one on your left will have black and white checkers. When a wreck obstructs the channel a green buoy will be placed on the sea side of the wreck, with the word 'wreck' plainly painted on it in white letters, provided there is a clear channel around it; otherwise, an even number will be painted in white above the word 'wreck' when the buoy is on the right side of the channel, and an odd number if the buoy is on the left."

FETID AND PROFUSE PERSPIRATION.—This condition is most commonly found in the feet, although the armpits and other parts of the body are sometimes affected. The following treatment will be found successful in most cases: Just before retiring at night, take a hot and cold foot-bath, dipping the feet first in cold water then in hot, allowing them to remain in each for about one-half minute, and repeating the operation fifteen or twenty times. Then wipe with a soft towel, and when nearly dry, rub with subnitrate of bismuth, using a large teaspoonful of the powder for each foot.

The variable weather in Kansas is said to have killed a large area of winter wheat.

This is the best durable file-holder in use. Send for sample, or further information, to this office.

Mining and Scientific Press.

THE MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS is the leading mining journal in America, and enjoys a larger circulation among the more intelligent operators and workers in the gold fields of the world.
Established in 1860, it has firmly maintained its position as a reliable, progressive journal. The information given in its columns has saved millions of dollars to the practical miners, metallurgists, mill men, mine and share holders on the Western side of our continent.
Among its contributors are the ablest and most experienced mining engineers, superintendents and practical miners in this country.
The Press gives a condensed summary of Mining News from the most important mining districts of the country. New processes and methods of mining are described in its weekly issues. New mining machinery and improvements are frequently illustrated and explained in a manner to be of great value to all interested in mining.
As a scientific and mechanical representative of the Pacific Coast it is decidedly popular, and a standard journal with the most thrifty industrial people of the Pacific States and Territories. Its authority is of the highest order, and its usefulness in its special sphere unrivalled.
Every public library, mining engineer, metallurgist, mining operator, and intelligent mechanic and manufacturer, will find profit by its reading.
Subscription, $4 a year in advance. Sample copies, prepaid, 10 cents.

Hard To Beat.

The following characteristic circular we take from an Eastern exchange, which publishes it for its merit as a humorous production. It was issued last fall by that droll fellow, the Recorder of Reliance Lodge, No. 149, of Philadelphia:

Brothers—The holidays are over, "school keeps" again, and summer, dusty and sunburnt, has departed on its vacation. The ice cream crop has been garnered, soda water is sizzling its last "siz," and crops generally are being gathered.

The time is at hand for us to commence our harvest of new members. On this notice you will find the names of two applicants. It is a good beginning. We like it and hanker for more.

May be you don't know it, but other Lodges are walking right away from us in membership. There's "Quaker City," for instance, with twelve hundred members, capering around like a young goat on a stable roof, while we—well, we are laying around loose, with the same old 127, like a played out car-horse on a down-town lot.

Brothers, it is time to wake up and go to work. Why, if every member would bring in only nine new members, we would be the Banner Lodge of the Order. But then there is nothing mean or selfish about us, and rather than deprive any Lodge of its title of "Boss," we are only going to ask you to bring in one solitary new member. Enclosed is a blank application, printed expressly for applicants to sign. Now, after you have looked at it don't throw it away or waste it, but right now, while you have it in your hand, look round your circle of relatives and friends for the man that needs it most; like as not he lives right next door to you; see him without delay and persuade him to use it, then send, or better still, come down to the Lodge next Tuesday and get another one or two—we have plenty of them and enjoy handing them out; it's encouraging and looks like business; besides it shows that Reliance is not quite ready yet to be classed among the tired Lodges.

Fraternally and hopefully yours,
M. SUMMERS CLARKE, Recorder.

Financial Obligation.

In the majority of fraternal societies, so-called, of the present day, the principle of fraternity finds expression in providing for a possible period of sickness during the time of health and prosperity, and the basis of nearly all of our fraternal obligations is found in this idea. In many cases this is varied, and the principal, if not the sole idea, is the payment of a sum of money to designated heirs of from $1,000 to $5,000. The basis of this sick or death benefit, as the vent to their righteous indignation, and express scorn and contempt for the quality of the "fraternity" that could allow a brother to be suspended when it could have been prevented in the simplest manner possible—merely the payment on his account of a paltry fifty cents or a dollar, which he would have repaid immediately. Now, what right has a member, when he has allowed his indebtedness to accumulate, to expect some one else to advance sufficient to keep him in good standing, and then rely on his honesty to repay what is merely a debt of honor—not even collectable by process of law. And, again, would a person who neglects to pay when there is a penalty for such neglect, be likely to pay when, apparently, he loses nothing by not paying? When a WEDNESDAY, the 5th instant, was a field day for coin receipts in the Grand Recorder's office. Over $4,000 came in, the largest amount ever before received in one day in that office. Of this amount, Valley, No. 30, on assessments Nos. 3 and 4, paid in $1,935, nearly a sufficient amount to pay one full death loss of $2,000. It is facetiously proposed by some, that in the not far distant future, Valley should be set apart as a separate Jurisdiction.

DISTRICT DEPUTY E. S. THOMPSON is working up a new Lodge at Hotelling, Placer county.

ABOUT twenty semi-annual reports due from Lodges have not yet shown up. They are badly needed at once.

THE Grand Lodge session will be held at B'nai B'rith Hall, on Eddy street, commencing on Tuesday, April 1st, next. As but little legislation is needed, the business will probably be concluded in three days.

case may be, is the amount fixed by the law of the society as dues and assessments, and paid by the individual members. Now, it stands to reason that the prosperity, the effectiveness and the good faith of the society depend almost wholly upon prompt payment by the members. Of course, a general refusal to pay would result in a dissolution of the society, as soon as sick benefits are remitted, and members unable to help themselves are left without what the society justly owes them, the society becomes a stench in the nostrils of the community and ceases to exist from very shame.

But individual, and not collective, obligation is our theme. Penalties for non-payment are fixed by the laws, and when indebted to a certain amount a member is suspended, and wakes up to the fact that all his former payments are practically forfeited. Who has not heard men, under these circumstances, give member lays himself liable to suspension, the financial fraternal obligation ceases, and he forfeits all rights to the benefits of the society, having neglected that duty, the performance of which is essential to the society's prosperity. It will be seen that the plain duty of every member is to see that his dues and assessments are promptly paid, thus assuring the prosperity of the Order, and materially lightening the work of the officers.

YOUR friend, whom you have been intending to bring into the Order for months, may be prostrated by sickness or called from earth before the next meeting. See that friend at once.

THE Grand Lodge officers who have reports to make are all busy in the preparation of their respective documents, which will contain much interesting matter.

JUDGING from duplicate credentials sent in, the Grand Lodge will be composed of Representatives, at least two-thirds of whom will attend for the first time.

Monterey Scenery.

We give herewith a pretty bit of land and water-scene scenery on the borders of Monterey Bay. There are many nooks about Monterey having great attractions for the artist's pencil, but not many that will surpass in quiet beauty scenes like this of which the engraving gives us a few hints. The rustic bridge, the dimpling waters of the bay, the varied and flourishing vegetation, the gnarled Monterey cypress at the left, betraying little relationship to its cultivated cousin of the park—all go to make up a picture of beauty.

The Fireside.

The Brook's Song.

(Original.)

From the foot of a grand old mountain, I commence my journey down the long valley between ridges and under bridges.

On my banks the green mosses and delicate ferns grow in their rich splendor.

On one side stands a tree filled with snowy blossoms, and day after day as I pass one by one of the flowers drop, and I see at the close of spring, that I have carried away the young tree's beauty and pride.

I murmur under the starlight, and look through the foliage at the bright moon. The sun often pours his extreme heat on me, but I flow to the forest. There the cool green leaves shield me from his scorching rays; and there the little birds sing, the insects hum, and I murmur softly in my happiness, and onward go toward the ocean.

Sometimes dark clouds overshadow me and I feel lonely; but the golden sands and shining pebbles beneath and the little fish are my companions, and I do not murmur with discontent, but look forward when sunny days shall come again.

Of course I see cruel ones come to my banks and take from me my friends—the fish—with the sharp hook so, treacherously concealed. I cannot make my friends stand against the temptation of going near what they think, something that will harm them not.

Every day I see a pale young girl on a rustic bridge above me. Oft I see her weep and I feel sad, for I too well know the cause of her sorrow.

Many years ago there was a fearful storm. The water came pouring down from the surrounding hills and mountains. I was so excited that the water caused me to grow larger and larger, and my stream that flowed in spring and autumn as clear as crystal, changed to dark, angry water.

I did not know myself. I carried houses, animals and people forward in my rush. But there was one—yes, a little girl five years old, that I carried down with me. Never shall I forget her little white face as she turned it upward calling for aid. Her sister's heart was almost broken, and this is why she comes to my banks and looks into my clear depths, as if in search of her lost darling.

Juniper's Wife.

"I say it again, I think that when a man is as old as you and as well-to-do he ought to have a wife," repeated young Parson Frank, stoutly.

Ebenezer dropped the axe. "Look-a-here, Master Frank. Don't St. Paul give a kind of general order that men folks are better single? Hain't I had the hull seperintenderin' of this big farm for your ma while you've been off to your commentaries and Hebrew? Come now, be reasonable. Besides, the Kitterys hain't never been marryers—hain't troubled none of your cloth much."

"There's your brother Juniper—" interrupted the young man pertinaciously.

"Yes—there's Juniper, an' a pretty time he had tyin' himself up. Humph! Not but that he done well enough—very well in fact, when he'd accomplished it."

The young man's ears itched at once. "Tell me about that, Ebenezer," he said artfully. "I never heard how Juniper came to be married."

Ebenezer began his narrative with a pretense at chattering while it proceeded. From this he took to balancing the axe on his head; from that to sitting down opposite the Reverend Frank and carving a letter of the alphabet absent-mindedly on a bit of pine.

"You see, Master Frank, Juniper was not of the same disposition as me and brother Dan. He was the best lookin' of the three; straight an' supple, an' with a sparkle in his eye that he hain't lost yet. The girls to our village—it was when we was all livin' at the homestead, with father an' mother—all liked him, an' 'twas reciprocal. First Juniper was goin' to singin' school with Katey Parker, an' then 'twas all over the place that he an' Liberty Ann Myers were engaged. Next, 'twas Ginerall Jo Bank's eldest daughter—I disremember her name—an' before we'd fairly been plaguin' him on the subject o' Ginerall Jo's daughter he was attentive to Mimy Bunce. Brother Dan an' sister Lize an' me finally paid no heed to town gossip, but quietly went our ways an' let June go his'n. We were satisfied that he was merely nibblin' here and experimentin' there; didn't mean to settle down on anybody yet awhile.

"Now, down to the lower end of the village lived Widow Amanda Gayler an' her three daughters. The widow was a very smart, capable woman, an' her three daughters—well, three handsomer, cleverer, livelier gals never grew. Everybody liked 'em. Before long, Juniper was a frequent caller there. He rode out with Anna, the eldest; or he'd come to church with Jennie, the second; or he'd be heard of over to a dance at the Corners with Ruth, the youngest. The three sisters were wonderful fond of each other—an' fond of a little quiet mischief together, too. I don't think they kept any secrets from one another. It didn't occur to me, Master Frank, for some time, that brother Juniper really wanted to marry one o' these girls—and couldn't make up his mind which he wanted. But that was just the state he was in. You see he'd grown up with 'em all three an' been so intimate with 'em even while he'd been keeping up his attentions to half a dozen other girls, that no one of 'em had apparently ever made a deeper impression on him than the other. They was all alike so friendly an' so kind an' so full of fun. When he came to settle down to goin' to their house more than elsewhere, he was better pleased with 'em than ever; but whether 'twas Anna or Jenny or Ruth?—that was the pint poor June was a-wrestling with internally, for weeks an' weeks. That fall his uncle, Jared Kittery, died an' left him the Stone farm; an' brother said that he'd really ought to pick out a wife and settle down.

"One night I found it out. He let me understand, very sheepishly, just how he felt. 'You see, Brother Ebenezer,' he said, 'I am terribly perplexed; an' suppose I should find after I was married that I'd made a mistake?'

"Well June, says I, 'I don't see that you're likely to get far enough on to make a mistake. A man who don't know his own mind had better draw lots for a partner.' I spoke rather contemptuously, I dare say.

"Brother Juniper jumped from his chair by the table with a sort of angry sparkle in his eye; but he gave a short laugh. 'Not a bad notion, Eben,' said he. I sat by the table, occasionally sayin' a word here an' there with reference to the three girls; how Anna was so well educated an' Junny such a first-rate housekeeper an' Ruth such a pretty, sensible sort of a young female—all more to tease June a little than anything else. All at once June jumped up. He had three pieces o' paper in his hand. Blest if he hadn't written on one of them 'Anna,' on another 'Jane,' an' 'Ruth' on the last! 'There,' says he, shakin' 'em together in my bat, 'much obliged to you for your good advice, Brother Ben. I'm going to draw for one of those girls. Whichever name I get—she's the one I'm goin' to ask to be Mrs. Juniper Kittery before Sabberday.'

"I laughed, takin' the hull matter as a foolish joke. 'All right,' says I, 'I'll hold the hat.' So I did. June shut his eyes and jammed in his fist. 'Read it out!' says I to him. 'Anna,' he answers, rather slowly, an' as if not so astonishedly happy. He tossed away the paper an' said no more. Thinks me, 'June has got some sort of an inward preference for one o' them sisters, after all; and he don't know it, but it isn't for Anna.'

"I never thought seriously of that caper we two had cut that evenin' until Saturday night, when just as I was closin' up the house, last one to go to bed, in steps June.

"I've done it, Eben," says he, with a sing'lar sober face.

"June?" says I; 'not Anna-d.'

"Yes," he answers, 'I've Anna-d; not Jenny-d nor Ruth-d. Don't you recollect last Monday evenin'? That settled it. I've abided by that piece o' paper. She said she'd have me. It's done; an' I'm glad.'

"Well," said I, 'I give you joy, June; though I must say your way o' clearin' up your doubts aint to my taste for common usage. Anna's a fine girl.'

"But that ain't all, Brother Eben," he went on. 'Anna's got an amazin' queer notion o' gettin' married. 'T seems she's been a readin' some novels or stories and so forth, an' I guess they've made her fanciful. She thinks that it'd be grand fun to surprise our folks along with ma an' the other two girls, by us two bein' married on the sly the night before Thanksgiving—an' then comin' home and tellin' 'em. I don't see any fun in that—not a bit. I think it looks rather foolish. But Anna—I declare I don't know what's got into her!—she will hold to it. The long and short of it is that—'

'You've promised to do it,' says I.

"Yes," he answers. 'I suppose it'll make a stir, but that can't be helped. I've promised. None of her folks nor ours must know anything about our engagement yet. On Thanksgiving evenin' I'm to call for Anna with the sleigh. I want you to come along, too, Eben. We'll go straight down to Battle Hill, to Parson Latham's, an' have the knot tied. Then we'll come back an' let it out to the widow an' Jenny an' Ruth. After that the hull crowd of us will pile down here, an' have the pleasure of seein' father an' mother an' everybody here open their eyes. That's Anna's idea. As I said, I don't specially admire it, but still I give in to it.'

"Thinks me, Master Frank, 'there's some game here that clever girls's up to. Mebbe—an' not.' But I told Juniper I'd go with him on Thanksgiving night. 'You can sit in the back seat and I'll drive,' I said. June laughed. 'See here, June,' I says a moment later, just as we went up the stairs, 'I hope that you never let Anna know how it was that you picked her out from her blushed.'

"June blushed an' stammered something like 'Cert'ly not—it would have come out this way in any case, an' went into his room. 'H'm,' I thought, 'I'm not so sure of that. I must give you a good talk to-morrow.'

"When I tried to talk, however, June wouldn't hear to me. 'He knew what he was doing,' so he persisted. 'Anna was the girl who would make him just the wife he wanted, an' the Stone farm was all ready for 'em to move in right away.' He had 'rather taken a fancy, he remembered, to Ruth at one time, but that hadn't amounted to anything.' I said no more, but I kept up quite a thinkin'.

"The night before Thanksgiving of that year was as clear as a bell. There was three feet o' show all over the country. At 7 o'clock, June an' I drove to the Gayler's door. Almost before I'd got the horses still, a figure all tightly wrapped up slipped out the gate. Poor Anna! She seemed terrible nervous as June helped her into the seat by him.

"Oh, June," I heard her say, 'I almost wish I'd never thought o' this silly plan.'

"June did almost all the talkin' while we spun down the street and out on the Battle Hill turnpike. Anna sat with his arm half round her, and seemin' for the first time to realize that she was takin' an important step in life.

"I hardly looked at 'em after Anna was in her seat by June. The horses were in a complete gale. I had to give them my hull attention. It required whip an' reins an' everything else to make 'em behave. The parsonage at Battle Hill is only two miles an' a half from our village. We fairly flew over the road, then, just before we passed the big gates that led to Squire Loftus's place, Dollar gave a lunge. That set Prince a-goin'. Before I could help it, they wheeled sharp, overset the sleigh, an' ran themselves up to the shoulders in a show-bank. There they stood. We, meanwhile, were pickin' ourselves up as best we could.

"In the name of goodness!—' I heard Juniper shout in a voice that frightened me half to death. I scrambled up and looked at the other two. It was bright moonlight. There stood Brother Juniper. In front of us was the person who'd come with us in the sleigh—Ruth Gayler.

"Before either of us could say a word she burst right out cryin'. Then followed the queerest, the most mixed up an' generally surprising explanation of what had took place an' how it had come about, that ever I expect to hear in all my mortal life. Most of the time Juniper just stood there, pale and bewildered. I put the best part of the bad questions there was to ask, holding the horses' heads. It must have looked a curious picture.

"Our hired help and Lucretia Tabb, who'd been dresmakin' at the Gaylers' farm for a couple o' weeks, off an' on, was great friends. That night when Brother June had drawn that lot—we'd ought both to have been ashamed of ourselves for such foolishness—our Almira'd overheard the hull affair. She told Lucretia Tabb. And what does Lucretia do but tell Anna; an' Anna told her sisters.

"At first, Anna was pretty well put out at Brother June. Then when she an' Jenny an' Ruth talked it over, they couldn't but laugh an' call it all a real joke on June. Then they put their heads together directly, to find out a way to punish June for coming to one of them with an offer under such circumstances. That was why Anna'd contrived the stolen wedding. "When they first planned it out, Ruth (who had plenty of mischief in her) was perfectly willin' to undertake the part arranged for her she to meet Brother June, instead of Anna, in the dark. That'd be easy; the girls had all much of a light, finger and voice. When we'd reached Parson Latham's steps, she was to pull off her veils and make a low bow to poor June an' say, 'Mr. Juniper Kittery, I've brought my sister's compliments an' she hopes that the next time you ask a girl to marry you, you'll know whether you love her or whether any of her sisters mightn't do just as well—especially, she hopes that you won't toss up for her.' Then she was to hold out the identical piece of paper with 'Anna' written on it. (Almira pounced on it, while she was sweeping the day after 'twas written.) An' last of all, Ruth calculated to say, 'Come, June, a joke's a joke. We don't bear no malice, not even sister Anna. You mustn't. Just drive me back home.'

"But, you see, Master Frank, Ruth had liked Brother June more than she thought, an' all week the idea of actin' such a part even to oblige Anna and have some sport, galled her the worst. She couldn't bear to think of it. She begged Anna and Jenny to let her off an' Jenny to play the part of Anna, herself. But, no; they insisted on her keepin' to her promise. So, between her being so mortified and so afraid o' hurtin' brother's feelin's too keenly, she was pretty well unnerved when Anna and Jenny pushed her out of the door to run to the sleigh. Then, too, there was me. June hadn't happened to say a word about calculatin' on my goin' to Parson Latham's with 'em. Ruth felt worse than ever.

"Oh, June," she said, with her golden hair all fallin' down on her shoulders, an' her voice choked with cryin', will you, will you forgive me? Please do, dear June, I'm so ashamed of myself. Whatever shall I do to show you how sorry I am?

"June didn't answer for a minute. His eyes were flashin' an' his teeth set. I could see that Anna Gayler was out of his books forever. But what I couldn't see was goin' on jest in that identical space o' time. Brother June was findin' out his own heart at last. He looked at Ruth an' remembered what good, true friends him an' her'd been during all their pranks and capers. He was discoverin' what a beautiful face she had; for she was the handsomest of the three, an' how she felt at havin' helped in mortifyin' him. She was a good, true girl, was Ruth, under all her mischief.

"Ruth," says brother, coming up closer to her an' holdin' out his hand, 'don't say no more; please don't. It's I who ought to beg pardon of Anna an' all of you. I do it—especially of you, Ruth. I know now that I haven't ever cared half so much for Anna as—as I have—for somebody else. What a blind fool a man can be, if he only tries. Ruth, I came down this road to-night to get married to a woman I thought I loved; please don't be angry, nor think me a weathercock, as I've seemed to be. I want to go back an' tell Anna, an' your folks, an' mine, an' all the village, that I've married the girl I love. There's the difference.

"Ruth Gayler started back from Brother June. I could see how white her face had grown in the clear light. 'June,' she said, sharply, 'I—I don't understand.' As she spoke she tried to draw away her hand, and June went on quickly, 'But I do, an' I must make you see it.'

"I quietly turned away, under the pretence o' the horses bein' restless. I was dumfounded. June an' she stood there, with me a little way off. They talked an' talked. I would only catch June's voice now an' then, not her's at all. I knew now that she loved brother, an' that, whatever he said, she'd have to fight against herself or June would carry any point he chose—the han'some, persuadin', shamefaced fellow.

"All at once he turned round and called out, with a laugh that rang over the fields, 'Hurrah, brother Eben! I've won my wife!' An' he came over to the sleigh, half leadin' half liftin' Ruth Gayler in his arms, with her a-laughin' and trying to make him keep still an' goodness knows what all. I jined in with all the fun, an' we had a real good frolic. But it ended in our goin' straight on to Parson Latham's door an' gettin' out, and brother Juniper an' Ruth Gayler, blushin' an' tremblin', bein' married then an' there, before my eyes, an' my drivin' home to the Gaylers' in my best style.

"You can imagine how the village was stirred up when next day part o' the story got out. Only part, for all the widow's folks kept Anna's share in it still as a mouse; an' so did June an' me. Everybody wanted to know 'why in the world the two young folks'd been married in that queer, sudden way.' Nobody outside of us two families ever found out. As for Anna, she was just as delighted as any woman could be. She'd suspected how Ruth felt and June too all along, an' had hoped that after this joke was all over brother might think some day seriously o' Ruth; but, of course, she'd no notion of so sudden a wind-up of the thing in just the way she wished. As for Ruth—why she made June the best an' lovin'est wife in the world, an' he's been as happy with her as the day is long at the farm. —Good Cheer.

Woman Suffrage.

The leaders of the National Woman Suffrage Association propose to make their 16th annual convention, which will be held in Washington, March 4th to 6th, a notable meeting and doubtless intending making a mark on the present Congress. The circular they have just issued has the following:

All State and local suffrage societies are earnestly requested to send delegates with carefully prepared reports of work done and results achieved during the year 1883 in their respective States, and all persons interested in the enfranchisement of women are invited to attend the convention and to participate in its deliberations.

Among the speakers invited to be present are Matilda Joslyn Gage, Isabella Beecher Hooker, the Rev. Olympia Brown Willis, Phoebe W. Cousins, Harriette Robinson Shattuck, Mme. Clara Neymann, Belva A. Lockwood, Mary B. Clay, Sallie Clay Bennett, of Kentucky, Lillie Devereux Blake, Elizabeth Boynton Harbert and Helen M. Gougar.

The principal object of the association, from its organization, has been to secure to the women of the several States and Territories National protection in the citizen's right to vote through a sixteenth amendment to the National Constitution.

The favorable reports of the special committees in both houses of the Forty-seventh Congress, lead us to hope, from the Forth-eighth, the final passage of the resolution now pending for the submission to the several State Legislatures of a proposition to so amend the National Constitution that it will prohibit the disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex.

The satisfactory results of unrestricted suffrage for women in Wyoming Territory, of school suffrage in twelve States of the Union, of both municipal and Parliamentary suffrage in the Isle of Man, with the recent triumph in Washington Territory, the constant agitation of the suffrage question in this country and in England, and the demands that women are everywhere making for larger liberties, are most encouraging signs of the times, and make this the supreme hour for all who are interested in the enfranchisement of women to dedicate their time and their money to the success of this movement, and by their generous contributions to strengthen those upon whom rests the responsibility of carrying forward this beneficent reform.

Pattie's Gingercake.

Mamma had gone down-town, and the careless nurse, Betsy, had shut her eyes, and was snoring in her chair, fast asleep. She was a large negress, about forty-five years old, and could puff away at her pipe like a steam engine. She had been Pattie's nurse ever since Pattie was a tiny, wee baby, and Pattie thought a great deal of her. Now she, I mean Miss Pattie, was only six years old, but she felt very wise and womanly. Suddenly a thought popped into her naughty little head. She would make a gingercake. Well, she trotted out into the kitchen, and first got out the big baking-pan. Then she went to the flour barrel, which stood under the shelf in the pantry. The flour scarcely covered the bottom of the barrel, but it was enough, she thought. But how to get it was the question. She must go and get her little stool, and stand on it, to reach the flour. Happy thought! But alas, the barrel tipped over, and knocked her down, and threw all the flour on the floor. She got up quickly, and gathered what she had so unluckily spilt. Next she was sure she must have molasses, for had not she often seen the cook take down the jug and pour out that thick, pretty stuff, to make gingercake? It was on the top shelf, she knew, and went straight away to get it. There were two jugs on the lower shelf, and only one on the highest. She did not know which one was the molasses, for she could not read the labels. She tasted the first one, and it was very sour, so sour that Pattie thought it must have been vinegar. The second was molasses. She then poured it into the pan, and mixed it in with the flour. Then she put spice and soda in it, and a great many other mixtures, including sugar, enough to make candy for you every day in the week, and not a speck of ginger. She then folded the arms and sat down to think if anything else belonged to gingercake. No, she could not think of anything else. It happened that the cook had that day made some dough for cake, and set it back of the stove on a chair to rise, and Pattie, seeing it, put her gingercake beside it to rise also. She then went off and forgot it. Late in the evening, mamma had not come home, and Pattie was sitting on her little stool again, thinking as usual. Betsy went out into the kitchen to put her forgotten cake in the oven. She did not light the lamp, but picked up what she thought was her cake, but it was Pattie's, and put it into the oven. Later, Pattie went to the kitchen to put her cake into the oven. She was too small to light the lamp, and so she picked up what she thought was her cake, but of course it was Betsy's, and put it into the oven, and then went back to Betsy, and mamma soon came home. They went to bed in a very little while, and were soon fast asleep, Betsy snoring as usual—her forgotten cake in the oven. The next day was Thanksgiving, and Pattie woke up bright and early and went to get her gingercake. She saw Betsy's cake in the oven, and thinking it was her's she took it and carried it as a Thanksgiving dinner to lame Jimmy, who lived in a little shanty down the lane. Dinner time soon came, with turkey, and meat and lots of nice things, and last of all—the cake. Betsy brought it in, with a frightened face, saying: "Oh, missy, de spirits am come suah, for jes look at my cake. I done put it in de oven last night and now it smells like 'lasses and spice, and I don't know what all." "Oh, Pattie," said mamma. "Oh, mamma," said Pattie, "I dess dat was my gingercake, an' I dess lame Jimmy has dot yours." Pattie was crying hard now, and mamma soon drew from her the whole story, and had to laugh over the mistake. Pattie is a big girl now, and can make a nice gingercake, but she will never forget her first cooking-lesson.—Tribune.

A NEW FIRE EXTINGUISHER.—At a recent test of the hand-grenade fire extinguisher, a wooden box about seven feet high was set up in an open lot, and after being thoroughly saturated with tar and kerosene oil was set on fire. When the box was all aflame and the boards burned about half through, the exhibitor threw two of the grenades into the box. The flames instantly ceased and every vestige of fire, even to the smallest coal disappeared when two more were broken, the whole experiment using four grenades, costing at the price charged for them about $2. The grenades are glass bottles holding about a pint, or half-pint, of liquid, and when broken they give off a gas in which it is chemically impossible for combustion to take place. They are designed, more particularly, for use in dwellings, factories, and on shipboard, where any small fires may be instantly extinguished without calling on the fire department. The fluid is perfectly harmless to the clothing, the hands, or in fact anything with which it comes in contact.

How a Man Dropping One Thousand Feet Feels.

With regard to the recent sad suicide of a girl by leaping from one of the towers of Norte Dame, Dr. Bromardell's expressed view that asphyxiation in the rapid fall may have been the cause of death, has given rise to some correspondence in La Nature. Mr. Bontemps points out that the depth of fall having been about 66 metres, the velocity acquired in the time (less than four seconds) cannot have been so great as that sometimes attained on railroads (e. g., 106 feet per second on the line between Chalons and Paris, where the effect should be the same), yet we never hear of asphyxiation of engine drivers and stokers. He considers it desirable that the idea in question should be exploded, as unhappy persons may be led to choose suicide by a fall from a height, under the notion that they will die before reaching the ground. Again, Mr. Gossin mentions that a few years ago a man threw himself from the top of the Column of July, and fell on an awning which sheltered workmen at the pedestal. He suffered only a few slight contusions. Mr. Remy says he has often seen an Englishman leap from a height of 103 feet into a deep river; and he was shown in

A Fireless Locomotive—A New Idea.

Mr. Hoagman, says the London Engineer, constructs an engine in which the steam is supplied by evaporation from a charge of water which is furnished to the boiler at the station, and there brought up to the required temperature and pressure. The shell of the boiler is surrounded by, or may inclose, another vessel, between which and the boiler a narrow space is left, which is filled with caustic soda. The exhaust steam is discharged into this mass of soda, which at once absorbs it, and the absorption gives rise to a large amount of heat, which is in turn given out, and returned to the water in the boiler, where it produces an additional quantity of steam; and the latter, being exhausted into the compartment containing soda, gives rise to additional quantities of heat; and thus the process is continuous, and the locomotive continues to exert its power, until the solution of soda becomes so far saturated that it can no longer take up the exhausted steam and supply heat to the boiler with sufficient rapidity to enable the engine to do its work. When this state of affairs is reached, the engine is recharged, and is again sent out on the line. The soda removed from the exhausted engine is placed in an evaporator and deprived of its moisture, and is then again ready for further service. This seems to be the first attempt to make practical application of the new well known principle discovered by Faraday sixty

Indian Signals.

We recently made an extract from the publications of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution, and gave an engraving of a form of Indian signals. That represented an Indian signaling "Who are you? I do not know you," and the answer giving the tribal signal of "Pani."

These signals are actions or manifestations intended to be seen at a distance, and not allowing the minuteness or detail possible in close converse. Signals may be executed—first, exclusively by bodily action; second, by action of the person in connection with objects, such as a blanket, a lance, or the direction imparted to a horse; third, by various devices, such as smoke, fire or dust when the person of the signalist is not visible. When not simply intended to attract attention, they are generally conventional, and while their study has not the same kind of importance as gesture signs, it possesses some peculiar interest.

The discovery of enemies, or game, or anything else, is announced by riding rapidly to and fro in a circle. The idea that there is a difference in the significance of these two directions of riding appears among many of the Dakota Indians of the Missouri valley to be erroneous. Parties away from their regular encampment are generally in search of some special object, as game, or of another party, either friendly or hostile, and when that object is found, the announcement is made in either of the above ways to their companions. The reason that a horseman may ride from side to side is that the party with whom he desires to communicate may be at a particular locality, and his movement—at right angles to the party—may be perfectly clear. Should the party be in small bands he naturally rides in a circle so all can see him.

The latter was noticed by Dr. Hoffman in 1883 at the Yellowstone river. The Indians had concentrated after their first repulse by Gen. Custer and taken possession of the rocks and bluffs across the river. As the column rode up one Indian was seen on a high bluff riding rapidly in a circle and occasionally firing his revolver. The signal announced the discovery of the coming force. Riding in a circle he produced a lateral movement visible from any point.

USED RAILROAD TICKETS.—The number of tickets collected by a first-class railroad, in the course of the year, says the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, is something stupendous. Five tons of these trifling paper slips accumulate in the Boston & Albany railroad office in Springfield yearly, and yield a snug sum when sold for paper stock. The colored tickets are bundled up by themselves in neat packages, and the white ones in separate lots, the latter, of course, bringing the highest price. But there is many a slip between agent Briggs' department and the pulp-room of a paper mill; in fact, the danger of having tickets used twice is so great that those collected for several years have been allowed to accumulate in a vacant room near the roof of the company's massive granite building. Three months ago a ticket cutter was added to the road's equipment, and meanwhile one man and two boys have succeeded in chewing up eight tons of tickets. A good winter's job remains, however, at least ten tons more being ready for mastication.

THE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH FORESHADOWED IN 1625.—M. H. de Parville furnishes to the Revue Scientifique an extract from the dialogues of Galileo, from which it would appear that about the year 1625 a rumor had become current in various countries of Europe as to the possibility of rapid distant intercommunication by means of some magnetic process—a foreshadowing of the modern telegraph. This possibility is thus indicated by Sagrado: "You acquaint me with a person who wishes to part with a secret which would enable persons, by means of certain sympathies existing between magnetic bars, to communicate with each other, although removed by distances of two and three thousand miles."

A MINIATURE INCANDESCENCE LAMP.—A small incandescence lamp for philosophical purposes has been introduced by Mr. J. C. Fuller, of Finsbury Pavement. The electrodes are zinc and carbon, and the fluid a solution of bichromate of potash. The cells are stated to remain active for more than thirty hours, and the expense of fresh fluid is said to be about three-pence.

MEXICAN INDIANS AT HOUSE BUILDING.

1852, in the island of Oahu, by missionaries, a native who had fallen from a verified height of more than, say, 1,000 feet. His fall was broken near the end by a growth of ferns and other plants, and he had only a few wounds. Asked as to his sensation in falling, he said he only felt dazed.

Within the Tropics.

The engraving on this page gives a glimpse at the aboriginal man as he may be seen within the tropics, making his habitation amid the rank and luxuriant vegetation of the region. The artist has caught his group at a time of unusual activity, for the aborigines are not much given to nervous and active exertion. In this picture they have an unwonted air of industry, and are laboring at the unbuilding of their habitation as zealously as could be wished. It is fortunate that there are some Indians who are energetic in good work, for without these exceptions the race would be wholly given over to indolence, except in matters which suit their taste for cruelty and adventure.

DANDRUFF.—Dandruff is a disease of the scalp and a very common affection. The causes are numerous. It may arise from want of cleanliness, infrequent brushing with a soft brush or too much brushing with a hard one, poor health, a dry scalp, wearing a close, unventilated hat, the use of a fine-tooth comb, an instrument which ought to be banished from the toilet. Avoid these causes and keep the head clean, and the disease will generally disappear.

years ago, and probably even earlier known on the continent of Europe.

A SINGULAR OCCURRENCE.—On the 28th of January last, during the great storm, a phenomenon was observed at Hueneme, Ventura county, which possesses some scientific interest in connection with the origin of tornadoes, or, as they are popularly but erroneously called, cyclones. Between 4 and 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the day mentioned a waterspout was observed at sea, traveling in the direction of the town. It left the ocean behind it a seething track of foam, and, "as it came nearer, water was seen whirling in it, and dark objects, either large fish, seals or bundles of seaweed." On striking the shore the waterspout changed into a tornado, tearing up weeds and small trees, and finally struck a house, which it totally demolished, the floor being carried 60 feet and dropped without harm to the occupants. A second house stood in the pathway of the terrible destroyer, but luckily the rotating air column took one of those sudden leaps upward which are mentioned in reports of so many Western tornadoes, and the house escaped uninjured. These particulars are furnished by a correspondent of the San Buenaventura Free Press, and show that it was a genuine tornado which did the mischief—such as abound in Kansas, Missouri and other States of the Mississippi valley—but of smaller dimensions and inferior destructiveness. But the interesting circumstance is that this tornado occurred partly on sea and partly on land, and thereby proved the absolute identity, so far as cause is concerned, of waterspouts and tornadoes as completely as Franklin's experiment with the kite proved the identity of electricity and lightning.

The Relief Committee.

Without desiring to influence action either for or against the proposed new constitution for the Bureau of Relief (being Proposition No. 8, Amendment No. 15), which is to come up before the next session of the Grand Lodge, the WATCHMAN desires to say a few words in reference to the subject in general. While it is generally admitted that the proposed constitution is so ponderous as to be in danger of falling to pieces of its own weight, and for that reason has already been voted upon adversely by many Lodges, yet it seems that at the coming session another law could be framed and passed, simple, and having for its essence the giving merely of sufficient aid to continue the life and efficiency of an institution that has already shown itself to be a serviceable one, and an accomplisher of much good. Anything that goes to strengthen us as a fraternity ought to be nourished for the good of the Order. There are numerous arguments that could be cited to show that a well conducted Relief Committee is a promoter of fraternity, but it is not necessary to dwell on these, as they will occur to the reader readily on short study of the subject. All we desire is to drop a seed thought here that may germinate into judicious action on the part of some of our thinking members.

OUR whilom Oregon exchange, the Pacific Overseer, and more recently the Lodge Visitor, has almost completely lost its identity now, being found occupying the back page only of a Portland society paper, called The Hesperian.

FRATERNITY.

[By MOSES STINCHFIELD, of Sycamore, Colusa Co.]

Fraternity! Thou art a tower of strength;
A rock of refuge in the hour of need;
A harbor safe, secure from blighting winds,
Where man may anchor free from Want's decree.

How cold the world! In selfish garb encased,
Man hurries on; regardless of the widow's tears
That plead for bread, to shield her little ones
From Hunger's greedy jaws; and deaf ear turns
From orphans' piteous cries for food and care.
How sinks the widow's heart in utter woe!
How swell the tears that dim the orphan's eye,
To find their pleadings vain! and gaunt Despair
Soon drags them down the paths that lead to death;
While selfish man, unheeding of the pangs
He might assuage, with head erect, like Priest
Or Levite in the olden tale, unheeds
The pleading voice his word might save from death.

Fraternity, thou art a tower of strength,
Where all encircled in thy saving fold,
May feel secure from Want's relentless fate.
In golden letters on thy shield is writ:
"A brother's wants insure a brother's care."

Fraternity, a word of magic power!
In our fair land, ten thousand altars glow
With thy pure light of love, and round thy shrine
The good, the true, the pure in heart unite,
To worship at thy ready call.

Go forth, where Mis'ry dwells, where Sickness holds his court;
Go forth where hunger gaunt and ghastly stands.
Go feed the hungry, and the naked clothe.
Bid Mis'ry flee his haunts; and where disease
Has paled the cheek, go plant the rose of health.
Go snatch the palsied drunkard from the grave,
And bid him be a man again; to tread
The paths that lead to honor, health and life.

Be father, brother, friend, to those who feel
The loneliness of life; who never knew
A mother's loving kiss—a father's love.
In whose lone hearts the pangs of sorrow dwell;
By gentle words and loving deeds, go smooth
The thorny paths their tender feet must tread.

Go forth, Fraternity. In every land
Go spread the blessings of thy name to all;
To every child of earth, go teach the truth,
That love to God is love to fellow man.

Not Yet Vanquished.

The New England Workman joins the Michigan Herald in defense of the decision of the Supreme Lodge in the famous Pengelly case, and professes to think that we are "off our base." He does not pretend to deny our assertion that the decision is beyond question contrary to the letter of the law—indeed he in effect admits as much by proceeding to argue that where a member leaves one Jurisdiction and joins another, the date of his transfer is to the Jurisdiction he joins, to all intents and purposes the date of his receiving the Master Workmen Degree so far as the Jurisdiction receiving him is concerned. Some such notion must have been in the heads of the members of the Supreme Lodge when the Pengelly decision was made, else they could not have put themselves on record in plain opposition to a specific law. No doubt they thought that if such was not the law, it ought to be, and decided accordingly. We believe in the Supreme Lodge. We uphold it as best we can. We believe in obeying its edicts and decisions, but we do not believe that body, or any other this side of heaven, to be infallible. We believe that when a decision is palpably wrong both in law and equity, it is our duty to complain and endeavor to have the wrong put aright. Heretofore we have not only pointed out how plainly the Pengelly decision was at variance with the law, but that it was unjust also. Now because it no doubt seemed to be exactly what it is not, and therefore an erroneous decision was made, a little further elucidation of the subject may help our contemporary to determine with something more of certainty as to whether or not we are "off our base." We briefly present a few points bearing on this and like cases:

- 1st. The A. O. U. W. levies assessments on or about the 1st of the month, and at no other time.
- 2d. No member is liable on any deaths for which no assessment has been levied.
- 3d. A member of one Jurisdiction having paid all demands against him for assessments, and getting a clearance card, according to law, is privileged to join any other Jurisdiction, though a thousand deaths remaining unassessed for in his Jurisdiction, have occurred and for which he would become liable pro rata, should he not transfer his membership.
- 4th. Transfer to another Jurisdiction absolves a member from all pecuniary claims of the Jurisdiction he leaves. The Jurisdiction of New York cannot assess or collect from a member of the Jurisdiction of Massachusetts.
- 5th. The protection of the Order is constant to its members who maintain their good standing, and therefore the liability to pay assessments somewhere should be constant also.
- 6th. As a member cannot pay assessments in a Jurisdiction to which he does not belong, he should be compelled to pay where he does belong.
- 7th. As the same law applies to all Jurisdictions no one could be seriously injured by this process for in losing on one it would gain on another, and the individual would suffer no injustice.
- 8th. Under the decision the individual profits and the Order loses. Brother Pengelly escaped three assessments by reason of transfer from Nevada to California. On the 29th ult. a member transferred from Oregon to this Jurisdiction, has already escaped two assessments, and will probably escape two more. His former associates are all this time paying their assessments regularly; so are his new ones. They get the same protection as he, but no more. They pay for it. He don't. Here's justice for you with a vengeance.

Brother Doherty, wrestle with the foregoing, and when you have finished, we may then see who is on his base and who isn't.

Degree of Honor.

Since this Jurisdiction took in hand the task of endeavoring to make something of the Degree of Honor, several other Jurisdictions have also joined in the endeavor, and at the recent session of the Grand Lodge of Kansas our Constitution in substance was adopted by that body. Now, if they proceed on the idea of organizing all their new Lodges on a beneficiary basis, no doubt they will meet with a fair measure of success, but otherwise they will fail. Lodges of the Degree organized simply on a social basis have long since proven a failure as a general proposition. But if beneficial, there is no good reason why they might not be as successful and prosperous as any of our other Lodges.

In this connection, we again feel constrained to express regret that our old D. of H. Lodges have taken so little interest in the beneficiary feature of the Degree, and as a consequence are languishing and dying by degrees; but again we are encouraged in the knowledge that several new Lodges of the Degree are contemplated to start out with a large preponderance of beneficial members. One, we understand, is soon to be organized by Deputy Jordan in this city, to be composed mostly of new members, but many will be drawn from the old Lodges. And now while upon this subject, we desire to say that there have been a good many complaints about the appointment of Deputies in Districts where Degree of Honor Lodges exist, who were not members of any such Lodge, nor in possession of the Degree work. There seems a palpable inconsistency in this, and while heretofore in many cases it was no doubt unavoidable, such difficulty no longer exists, a few rare cases, possibly, excepted. We trust that hereafter in the selection of Deputies this matter will be taken into consideration.

The Second Prize Poem.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—I have just received the WATCHMAN, and in its columns read the grand and stirring poem "Fraternity," by Sam Booth. If the poem on the same subject, sent you by "M. S.," will in any way inspire my co-workers in a cause for which I have labored for more than a quarter of a century, it will be a pleasure to me to give to the fraternal world this child of my brain. You have my consent to publish it in your valuable journal. Fraternally,

MOSES STINCHFIELD.

Sycamore, Colusa Co., Feb. 27, 1884.

WE acknowledge receipt of a copy of the latest Supreme Lodge Constitution and Laws. From among other items of interest we take this: "Sec. 3, Art. IX, Supreme Constitution, A. O. U. W., fixes the maximum annual rate of assessments for the several jurisdictions of the Order as follows: Iowa, 22; Michigan, 22; Minnesota and Dakota Territory, 22; Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware, 24; Wisconsin, 22; Ontario, 22; Kansas, 22; California, 24; New England States, 24; Illinois, 24; Indiana, 28; New York, 24; Pennsylvania, 24; Oregon and Washington, 24; Nevada, Utah, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming, 22; Missouri and Nebraska, 26; Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina, 28; District of Columbia, 28; Kentucky, 28; Ohio, 28; Tennessee, 28; Virginia and West Virginia, 26; Supreme Jurisdiction, 24; Texas and Louisiana, 28; Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico, 28."

WE publish on this page the second on the list of prize poems. It is of a high order of merit, and will well repay perusal.

the Clerk of this Court for said rela such of them as may be entitled thereto.

At the Supreme Lodge session, in 1879, Roderick Rose, an Iowa man, persuaded that body to resort to assessment on the whole Order, following, as he did, his illustrious successor, H. B. Fouke, who had, in 1878, urged, adopted, and put in force in Iowa that same unlawful method. Against this mandate Iowa "kicked." In 1880 the so-called Relief Law was enacted and incorporated into the constitution of the Order upon the report and recommendation of H. B. Fouke. In 1881, Indiana called, under this law, for relief, and a call was issued by the Supreme Master for 10 cents per member to be loaned to Indiana. Iowa was still smarting under the yellow fever calls. The Grand Master, J. D. Nichols, refused to send out the relief calls of 10 cents, taking upon himself to decide for the membership; as a result he was, together with two Subordinate Officers of the Grand Lodge, in turn, suspended from office. In February, 1882, the Grand Lodge met and indorsed the action of its suspended officers, and its charter was in turn suspended March 1, 1882, and all Subordinate Lodges instructed, as provided by law, to report direct to the Supreme Lodge until such time as its own Grand Lodge was again in operation. In April, 1882, W. R. Graham was commissioned Deputy Supreme M. W. for Iowa, and instructed to use his best endeavors to harmonize the trouble here and reorganize the suspended Grand Lodge. Notifying all Lodges he called them together at Marshalltown, May 16, 1882. At that meeting the Grand Lodge, was reorganized, the order of suspension revoked and rehabilitated, and with Mr. Graham elected Grand Master, it has since been battling for existence.

The Little Girl and the Bear.

Mr. George Swift, a ranchman in the Grand valley, told a story this morning which shows how unenviable is the life of the stock-raiser in that wilderness. A few days ago Mr. Swift let his three-year-old daughter ride upon his horse, and after she had ridden about forty rods from home, he lifted her off the animal and told her to run home. On returning about an hour later he found that the little one had not reached home, and, going to the place where he had last seen her, he found bear tracks in the sand. A posse was formed, and all night was spent in searching for the lost child. In the morning, as the searchers were passing a swampy spot where the underbrush was thick, they heard her voice. They called to the girl to come out of the bushes, but she replied that the bear would not let her. The men then crept through the brush, and when near the spot heard a splash in the water, which the child said was the bear. They found her standing upon a log, extending half way across the swamp, and it seemed as though the bear had undertaken to cross the swamp on the log, and, being, pursued, left the child and got away as rapidly as possible. She had received some scratches about the face, arms and legs, and her clothes were almost torn from her body, but the bear had not bitten her to hurt her, only the marks of his teeth being found upon her back, where he had taken hold of her clothes to carry her. The child told her rescuers that the bear had put her down occasionally to rest, and would put his nose up to her face, whereupon she would slap him and he would hang his head by her side and purr and rub against her like a cat. Her father asked her if she had been cold during the night, and she told him the old bear lay beside her and put his arms around her and kept her warm. "I believe the little one's story," concluded Mr. Swift, "for there was evidence to prove its truth, and I never knew her to utter a falsehood. Stranger than fiction, is it not?"—Leadville Chronicle.

"Silver Bells and Cockle Shells."

"Mistress Mary, quite contrary,
How does your garden grow?
Silver bells and cockle shells
All in a row."

Most of us children, little and big, have recited this verse, but comparatively few know there is a meaning attached to the last two lines. At the time when this rhyme was made there were really "silver bells and cockle shells," and in rows, too, though not growing in gardens.

In those days—some 200 years ago—there were no coaches. Ladies traveled and visited on horseback, sometimes riding on a saddle or pillion behind a gentleman or man servant, and sometimes managing their own horses, with the gentleman riding alongside, or the groom following behind. The equipments or trappings of these horses were very rich and costly. Generally the cloth which half covered them and on which they rode would be of finest woolen or silken material, handsomely embroidered. On grand occasions, or when the lady was very wealthy or noble, crimson velvet or cloth-of-gold would be used, edged with gold fringes and sprinkled with small pearls called seed pearls. The saddles and bridles were even more richly decorated, being often set with jewels or gold or silver ornaments, called "goldsmith's work." One fashion very popular in the times of Henry the Seventh and Henry the Eighth of England, was to have the bride studded with a row of tiny silver cockle shells, and its edge hung with little silver bells, which, with the motion of the horse, kept up a merry jingle. Bells were also fastened to the point of the stirrup, which was formed like the toe of a shoe. And this partly explains another old nursery rhyme, made, no doubt, about the same time:

"Ride a grey horse to Banbury Cross,
To see a fine lady go on a white horse;
Kings on her fingers and bells on her toes,
So she shall have music wherever she goes."

There is a very old book preserved at Skipton Castle in England, the account book of Henry Clifford, Earl of Cumberland. In this book, among a great many other entries, little and great, is one of the purchase by the Earl of "a saddle and bridle for my lady, embossed of silver cockle shells, and hung with silver bells," and on the same page is another entry of "a hawk for my lady, with silken jesses, and a silver bell for the same." It was the custom for noble ladies to ride with a hawk perched upon their wrists; and this Countess of Cumberland who is said to have been beautiful and stately, must have looked very grand when thus equipped.—St. Nicholas.

THE WESTERN MOUNDS.—More than usual attention is now being given to opening and preserving the contents of the earth-mounds which are so plentifully scattered throughout the Western and Middle States. Professor Norris, the ethnologist, who has been examining mounds in West Virginia for several months, recently opened a large mound six or eight miles from Charleston. The Call of that city says: "This is the largest mound in the valley, and proved a rich store-house. The mound is fifty feet high, and they dug down to the bottom. It was evidently the burial place of a noted chief, who had been interred with unusual honors. At the bottom they found the bones of a human being, measuring seven feet in length, and nineteen inches across the shoulders. He was lying flat, and at either side, lying at an angle of about forty-five degrees, with their feet pointing toward their chief, were other men—on one side two and the other three. At the end of the chief lay another man, with his hands extended before him, bearing two bracelets of copper. On each side of the chief's wrists were six copper bracelets, while a looking-glass of mica lay at his shoulder and a gorget of copper rested on his breast. Four copper bracelets were under his head, with an arrow in the center. A house twelve feet in diameter and ten feet high, with a ridge-pole one foot in diameter had been erected over them, and the whole covered by the dirt that formed the mound. Each of the men buried there had been inclosed in a bark coffin."

THE HUSBAND'S OPPORTUNITY.—It is doubtful whether the male head of a family often appreciates the opportunity he has for diffusing sunshine at home, or comprehends how much gloom he can bring with him in a troubled face and moody temper from the office or the street. The house mother is within four walls from morning till dinner time, with few exceptions, and must bear the worriments of fretful children, inefficient servants, weak nerves and unexpected callers. And she must do this day after day, with monotonous regularity. The husband goes out from the petty details of home care; he meets friends; he feels the excitement of business competition; he has the bracing influence of the outdoor walk or ride. If he will come home cheerful and buoyant his presence is like a refreshing breeze. He has it in his power to brighten the household life and add to the general happiness in a way that no man has a right to forget or neglect.

Photography in Hospitals.

Most of the French hospitals have now a photographic studio attached for photographing the sick persons at different times. The rapid dry-plate process is employed, and Professor Charcot, of the Salpêtrière, has devised an electrically operated camera which is very useful in taking a series of views in rapid succession. Certain classes of patients are photographed on their entry into the hospital and at regular intervals after. In cases of hysteria, for example, it is interesting to note the original contractions and compare them with succeeding ones. The photographs are placed in an album for study of the disease, and for comparison with others taken from other patients. In this way the leading features of the disease will be recognized. The new printing processes also enable these photographs to be copied and distributed to other hospitals and medical men.

Micro-photography, or the photographing of microscopic objects, is also a valuable branch of hospital work, which is becoming better recognized every day. The apparatus of Professor Charcot consists of a camera with a movable aluminum shutter controlled by an electromagnet and clock-work. A key and battery sends an electric current through the magnet at the will of the operator and, working the shutter, exposes an objective to the object. The photographer controls the apparatus by hand, and with his finger on the key, watches the patient until the desired moment arrives, then he presses his finger and exposes the plate for the instant required to take the likeness. When a regular series of views in rapid succession are required, the hand key is replaced by an insulating barrel set round with metal contact pieces, like a commutator, and these pieces make contact with a contact spring as the barrel revolves by clock-work. These metallic pieces are made of a triangular form, so that when a short exposure is required the spring is placed so as to rub over them towards their apices, and when a longer exposure is required it is caused to rub over them near the bases. The metronome, or automatic mercury current interrupter of M. Gaiiffe, is also applicable to this camera as an automatic key.—London Engineering.

SALT FOR THE THROAT.—In these days, when diseases of the throat are so universally prevalent, and in so many cases fatal, we feel it our duty to say a word in behalf of a most effectual, if not positive, cure for sore throat. For many years past, indeed we may say during the whole of a life of more than forty years, we have been subject to a dry, hacking cough, which is not only distressing to ourselves but to our friends and those with whom we are brought into business contact. Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in common salt. We commenced by using it three times a day, morning, noon and night. We dissolved a large tablespoonful of pure table salt in about half a small tumblerful of water. With this we gargled the throat most thoroughly just before meal time. The result has been that during the entire winter we were not only free from coughs and colds, but the dry, hacking cough had entirely disappeared. We attribute these satisfactory results solely to the use of salt gargle, and most cordially recommend a trial of it to those who are subject to diseases of the throat. Many persons who have never tried the salt gargle have the impression that it is unpleasant, but after a few days' use no person who loves a nice, clean mouth, and a first-rate sharpener of the appetite, will abandon it.—The Household.

COPPER IN THE SYSTEM.—MM. Houles and Pietra-Santa, who have studied the matter in the copper-working districts of France, recently made a communication to the French Academy of Sciences, on the action of metallic copper on the human system when breathed in the form of dust in the foundries. They state that in a workshop where yellow copper in great quantities is turned and the air is thick with copper dust, the workmen experience no ill effects from breathing the latter, though the same dust mixed with food sometimes gives rise to slight gastro-intestinal trouble and general malaise. At Tarn (Durfort), a colony of copper-workers, living twelve hours a day in an atmosphere impregnated with copper oxide and iron oxide, or red copper dust, do not suffer from it. There appears to be no special malady due to copper inhalation; and on the other hand, any immunity from typhoid fever or cholera has not been observed, though the people are in some instances yellow in the skin and eyes with copper taken into the system.

CORSETS FOR GIRLS.—At the recent Sanitary Exhibition in England there was exhibited an unusually large number of corsets for young girls. The London Sanitary Record, in commenting on this, remarks that "no straight, healthy, well formed girl should ever wear one of these articles. If older persons see fit to do so in later life they may, but to put them on to the growing girls can be called by no other name than a crime." This is forcible and true, and yet how many mothers will heed it?

THE Harper High License law of Chicago has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of that State.

Household Hints.

Recipes.

MESSRS EDITORS:—A correspondent desires a recipe for making oyster soup, chocolate and chocolate ice-cream. I will tell her how I make the two first articles:

For Oyster Soup.

I put into a double boiler (i. e., one kettle in another, with hot water in the lower kettle) two quarts, or as much as required, of fresh milk, cream and all (you see we keep cows). To this I add the liquor from one can of oysters, and some cracker meal, made by rolling fine a dozen or more of nice oyster crackers. When the soup reaches the boiling point, I add the oysters and let it stand a few minutes before serving. I presume if I could not get new milk and cream, I should take what milk I could get, mix with water and add butter. I never put pepper in the soup, as black pepper is obnoxious to many, myself among the number, and I let each pepper to his taste at table.

In Making Chocolate.

I use the double boiler also, putting in new milk if possible. For each pint of new milk I grate or scrape one finger of the best vanilla chocolate in a bowl or pan. In this I turn boiling water, and when well dissolved add to the milk. Let the whole cook until it appears smooth and free from any grains of chocolate. The Spanish people, who are great lovers of chocolate, often add one or two beaten eggs to the chocolate after it comes from the fire.

Pie Crust.

Let me tell you how I make pie crust for such pies as custard, pumpkin, or those which do not require a top crust. I oil the pans thoroughly with good olive oil, then sprinkle them to the depth of one eighth of an inch with either oat meal or coarse Graham flour, carefully putting it around the sides of the pan. I then turn in my pumpkin, custard or whatever material I am using, and bake thoroughly. This is very nice and entirely wholesome. I never use lard in any form.

Fruit Short Cake.

I also make a fruit short cake, which my children like, in this way: I take nice butter-milk and sweeten by adding to every pint a rounding teaspoonful of soda. I make of this a thick batter with Graham flour, and bake in pie pans or jelly cake tins, three or four cakes. When cool I split, butter the cakes, and put inside any kind of nice ripe fruit, as strawberries, etc., or even nice stewed dried fruit; of course sweetening the fruit to taste before adding.

Perhaps I may tell you some other time how I make other hygienic dishes.

San Jose, Feb 16th. Mrs. C. S. W.

We would be much pleased to have such contributions extended. They will be very acceptable to our readers.—EDITORS PRESS.

CRYSTALLIZED POP CORN.—Put into an enameled kettle one cupful of white sugar, three tablespoonfuls of boiling water and one tablespoonful of butter, cut up into tiny bits. Boil it for ten minutes, then drop a little into cold water to see if it will candy. If it hardens quickly, throw in as much popped corn as the sugar will cover; take the kettle from the fire into a cool place, and stir it well until all the corn is well crystallized with sugar. Setting the kettle into a pan of ice or snow will cool the sugar more quickly. Stir the corn all the time, so that it will absorb all the sugar, that each kernel of corn will be separate, and not in bunches. Halves of English walnuts, chestnuts, filberts and almonds can also be covered with sugar in this way, and prove very attractive.

CHEESE.—A writer in Knowledge recommends a dish of cheese thus made: Take one-quarter of a pound of grated cheese, add to it a gill of milk in which is dissolved as much powdered bicarbonate of potash as will stand upon a three-penny piece, with mustard and pepper to taste. Heat this carefully until the cheese is completely dissolved. Then beat three eggs, yolks and whites together, and add them to the dissolved cheese, stirring the whole. Into a shallow metal or earthenware dish put a little butter; when it frizzles pour in the mixture and bake till it is nearly solid. Serve hot. It is claimed that the addition of potash to the cheese renders its free use as an article of diet much more desirable.

PRUNE DUMPLING.—Soak half a pound of prunes for two or three hours. Boil them till nearly done, add sugar sufficient to sweeten them. Have plenty of syrup in them. Half an hour before the prunes are done make a nice biscuit dough, using beef suet for shortening and baking powder for raising, and put this into the boiling prune syrup. Boil twenty or twenty-five minutes. Take up on a platter and serve hot.

BREAKFAST GEMS.—Light cakes for breakfast or tea are made of one quart of sweet milk, three eggs, beaten separately and very light, a piece of butter the size of an egg, three coffee cups of flour, a little salt, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Put the whites of the eggs in last, and bake in gem pans in a hot oven.

Our Boys and Girls.

[Written by MAID-OF-ALL-WORK.]

It is more outdoor exercise that we are advocating for girls and mothers. They are afraid of the air because it is cold, damp, or it makes their faces red or it blows too hard. They say that it is all well enough for women who are stout to walk and ride, not considering that it is the riding and walking that makes them stout. Here is the outdoors and plenty of latitude, and here are the women pale and nervous, and they must learn by reflection or experience before they give up their drugs and rocking-chairs for the fresh, sweet air and the breath of the grassy hills.

Mrs. Margin thinks she could not be spared to spend any more time outdoors. There is the sewing and house-work, cooking and pastry, and in the farm house the burden of much serving. Everybody has noticed with what wonderful rapidity Janet can wash and put away the supper dishes if she has in store the delight of dressing for a party. If she had her heart set on seeing her garden arrayed in all the glories of Solomon, she could handle the breakfast service just as rapidly.

A woman works according to her ambition. She is peculiarly sensitive to the nearest motives that impel her. Hands that are swift and willing will soon work away things that stand before her first desire. Educate the desire, and women will find time to study nature, moral science, politics, anything.

The times, moreover, are already loosing the bands that tie women to dark and inner rooms.

"Followed them way out Mission street. Jo, he didn't 'hang on.'"

"That tall one was pretty badly 'mashed,' by the way she 'smiled.'"

"Yes, she was terrible 'sat down on.' You see they stopped at the L— house, but the old woman, she 'fired 'em out.' But they got places in the same block. That little one's too 'utter' for anything."

"What became of Jo?"

"O, he 'lit out' over to Alameda. He's 'hanging out' over there some where. He's a terrible fellow. Nell thinks he's 'utter.'"

At this point in the very aesthetic conversation I moved my seat and moralized, as all old maids will, on the economy of such a result.

How many years in a college of good standing will it take to purify these boys of their Market street culture?

Or what is the balance between one year in a college where the department and general culture of the students is looked after, and two years in the heart of a city, where the student is unrestrained with no one to wish him well?

Bless the boys! Possibly they are all right. But they talk slang, and they talk it too loud.

Of course there are noble examples where a boy will see his way clearly through anything. But the fact remains that the country boy in the city needs, particularly at first, a few intelligent friends who can direct him from the shoals and quicksands, and help him to find society and lecture-rooms that will improve and elevate him.

And it is plainly evident that it is best to send a boy to a good college at once. Even if he cannot stay to graduate, he will be benefited according to the time he stays there. The graduating papers don't amount to much, it is the attainments; and many will get as

The Postal Telegraph.

The Western Union Telegraph has shown some appreciation of the determination of the people to have cheap telegraphic facilities by reducing their tariff in some respects. It is announced that after March 1st the maximum tariff between all points in the United States, now $1.50, will be $1. This will be the day and night rate, the latter being abolished. For local service the minimum rate will continue to be 25 cents, as heretofore, but the 30 and 40 cent rates are to be lowered to 25 cents, the 75 cents to 60 cents, while the 50 cent rates will continue unchanged. Night rates are proportionately reduced. The rates between California and Nevada will be 75 cents where they are now $1, and 60 cents where they are 75 cents. The reduction between California and Arizona will be about 25 per cent, or from $1 to 75 cents; that between California and New Mexico from $1.25 to $1, and between California and Texas from $1.50 to $1. The rates between California and Oregon and Washington Territory are excepted from these reductions, for the reason that the company's lines would be incapable of accommodating the increased business which would arise from a lower tariff. A new line to Oregon is being constructed, and when that is finished, which it is expected to be in 30 or 40 days, the reduction will probably go into effect there also. But the local Oregon lines are affected by the reduction.

This reduction will of course be of great importance, and will be regarded as a step in the right direction, and fully justifies the position

Wheel Horse.

There is a wheel horse in every family—some one who takes the load on all occasions. It may be the older daughter, possibly the father; but generally it is the mother. Extra company, sickness, give her a heavy increase of the burden she is always carrying. Even summer vacations give less rest and recreation to her than to others of the family. I once heard a husband say:

"My wife takes her sewing-machine into the country, and has a good time doing up the fall sewing."

At the time I did not appreciate the enormity of the thing; but it has rankled in my memory, and appears now to be an outrage.

Woman's work is never done. But, because it is never done, she needs resting-times. Every night the heavy truck is put up, the wheel horse is put into the stable, and labor and care is dismissed till the morrow.

The thrills of the household van can not be turned up at night; and the tired house-mother can not go into a quiet stable for repose. She goes to sleep at night feeling the pressure of to-morrow. She must keep an eye ready to open at any moment to answer the need of children, and open both eyes bright and early to see the machinery well started for a new day.

There is never any time that seems convenient for the mother of little children to leave home even for a day; but with a little kindly help from her husband, and a little resolution in herself, she may go, and be so much the better for it that the benefit will overflow from her into the whole household. She will bring home some new idea, and will work with all the enthusiasm which comes from a fresh heart.

One word for the older sister who makes the salad for lunch and the dessert for dinner; who takes the position of wheel horse quite cheerfully, while her younger sisters make themselves beautiful and entertaining, and one after another find "one true heart" apiece to love them, and leave the maiden to grow into an old maid. However willing her sacrifice, it is one, and nothing but the devoted love and gratitude of the households whose fires she has helped to kindle, will reward her for what she has given.—Christian.

BUILT UP WOOD. A very strong and durable material is constructed in the following manner: Several thin sheets of veneers, an eighth of an inch thick are glued one upon another, with the grain of each sheet crossing the grain of the sheet next above or below it at right angles; and, when the whole complex fabric has lost all power of resistance through being almost saturated with steaming glue, it is pressed into an almost homogeneous board without any cleavage whatever, and so without possibility of splitting. Every sort of wood, of course, can be built up. The inside layers can be cheap and the outside choice. No matter whether or not the different sheets naturally swell and shrink evenly together. They are too thin to exert much force. Their separate identities are lost in the common and overmastering union. The advantages of economy, strength in every direction, and immunity from cracking are enough to give the fabric the readiest possible acceptance for whatever uses in may be adapted. It is already in use for broad, flat surfaces in cabinet work, especially where strength or permanence is wanted. It already competes with canvas for the use of artists, and with binders' board for book covers. Its availability for any purpose appears to be a matter of expense and skill—never of quality. That it will be adapted to many uses not now thought of is as sure as the inventive fertility of our mechanics.

MEDICAL VALUE OF LEMONS. Most people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few know that it is more than doubled by taking another at night also. The way to get the better of the bilious system without blue pills or quinine is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as appetite carves, in as much ice water as makes it pleasant to drink without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning, on rising, at least half an hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humor and bile with efficiency, without any of the weakening effect of calomel or congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear, the powerful acid of the juice, which is always most corrosive, invariably produces inflammation after awhile; but properly diluted so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its medical work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food, has abundant opportunity to work over the system thoroughly.—Medical Journal.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN PHOTOGRAPHY.—E. W. Fellows, Cleveland, Ohio, after experimenting for two years, claims to have succeeded in inventing a way to take instantaneous and absolutely permanent photographs upon anything having a smooth surface, by the action of electricity. The expense is less than one cent for each picture. If all that is here claimed is true, this invention will revolutionize photography.

INDIAN SIGNAL OF DISCOVERY OR ALARM.—See page 75.

Pastry as commonly made is disapproved of and going out of use.

Jerseys and tailor made suits cut down the family sewing. Little boys' suits are as cheaply bought as made. People generally are beginning to have better clothes and not so many of them.

Lack of interest makes slack hands and lack of time; if Mrs. Granger could only bring herself to think that she had time to make her front yard beautiful, she would soon improve in management and methods of saving labor, the pride and delight of gardenning would soon grow upon her, and best of all would come the vivacity and colors of vigorous health.

Care of the Youth.

At a recent public gathering on Apple Creek, two youths—half way between the big boy and young man period—sat on the bench in front of me. It seems they had been away to the city for a year getting a few terms of much needed schooling, and invigorating themselves with the advantages offered by the great metropolis.

They lived there in rooms, took their meals at restaurants and went to the public school. Even under this system of economy, the parents of these boys limited themselves not a little. They kept a mortgage on the farm, wore their old cloths, and deprived themselves of many little comforts and luxuries.

It appears that one of the boys had returned a few months before the other, and they were enjoying their reunion. As they were talking in a tone of voice unnecessarily loud, I took the liberty of listening, thinking that I might note signs of culture and improvement to rejoice over, for they were peculiarly "our boys," born and reared in our own peaceful neighborhood. I was amazed to hear a conversation which ran on very much as follows:

"Say, Tom, seen anything more of those girls we 'stuck on to that night?'"

"Yes, see 'em every few days."

"Where did you go that night we 'stuck?'" good an insight into all he practical subjects in two years as in four.

Moreover, they must look and act like gentlemen while they are there, and as habit is all-powerful, they are very apt to keep it up in after-life.

MECHANICS WHO RISE.—There is a large sized nugget of truth in this from Dr. J. M. Buckley's series of "Letters to Young Men." "Benjamin Franklin told the truth when he said that the best knowledge a man could give to his son was the mastery of a good trade. Such a man is a cosmopolitan. He can make himself useful anywhere, and he can live anywhere. If it should not be necessary always to work at his trade, he feels the ability within to support himself. * * * Between the average mechanic and the great manufacturer or merchant prince great numbers can be found who began as mechanics and who have taken positions by their mechanical skill fully equal to that of the average merchant and far superior to that of most clerks and professional men. * * * Always have in view rising above the position of a mere journeyman. Look at things from a broad business point of view. Consider that some day you may not be a journeyman, and try to study the relations of capital to labor and to master the principles of business, so that if you should ever form a partnership with a business man you will not be at his mercy, and so that, if you choose, you may at any time enter upon business for yourself, and not fritter away your life in a vain effort to overcome by mechanical skill financial obstacles." Every young mechanic should cut out the above extract and tack it up over his bench. It is too good to be lost.

THE Fire Underwriters of the Pacific coast have resolved not to grant, in any policy they may hereafter issue, permission for keeping fireworks, fire-crackers or explosive bombs in any place where they accept insurance.

which the people have plainly taken on the postal telegraph project. There are, however, few who will accept this reduction as anything like adequate to the needs of the occasion. It merely shows the truth of what has been claimed, viz.: that the people have been charged far more than they should be for quick communication, and the acknowledgment of this fact should not retard a movement which now has much strength, and which would free the people complete from the intrusion of monopoly into the benefits of speedy communication.

It is announced from Washington that Senator Hill, Chairman of the Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads, expects that the Subcommittee, which has in charge the subject of postal telegraphy, will report a bill within a week or two. This will be promptly reported to the Senate, and will, he believes, be taken from the calendar at an early day and passed. Mr. Hill is not certain just what features the bill will contain, but it will certainly embody the general ideas expressed in the bills on that subject, which have already been introduced.

While the sub-committee is at work, the full committee will continue its inquiries.

With regard to the chances of the bill in the House there is a difference of opinion. Its opponents claim to be confident that it will be defeated there, while Mr. Hill and others think it will pass. The principal objection to the bill, Mr. Hill says, is that it would be a dangerous centralization of power and would increase the number of federal office-holders. This is an objectionable feature, of course, but this pertains also to the postal service, and yet the people have cheap postage and are benefited thereby. If the same would follow the postal telegraph establishment, the benefits would overbalance the danger. At all events, the people seem disposed to make the experiment, and Congress will act wisely if it makes provision for realizing the popular will.

THERE will be railroad connection with the City of Mexico in about three weeks.

Lodge Locals.

Recorders are invited to correspond. Lodges may also find suitable reading here for "Good of the Order."

OUR CITY LODGES.

San Francisco, No. 4.

The principles and genius of our Order and results that follow are forcibly illustrated in the pioneer Lodge of this city. Its growth has been very slow as compared with other Lodges, but the record they have made in other respects is not excelled by any Lodge in this jurisdiction. There are now on their roll 175 members. The question of paying sick benefits is being discussed in this Lodge. As a rule every Lodge that has good officers will prosper. In this respect San Francisco, No. 4, from the organization has been blessed. Their present Financier, Brother Blumenthal, is an expert accountant. Their Recorder, Brother English, has held his position over four years, and their efficient M. W., Brother Fuller, is recognized as one of the best executive officers in this city.

Golden Gate, No. 8.

The grand old pioneer, Golden Gate, No. 8, has furnished the nucleus for several Lodges, and still there are borne on her rolls the names of 169 members, who are enthusiastic, and have a pride that they are members of Golden Gate. From its institution this Lodge has had the reputation of extreme generosity and liberality to Workmen who were in distress. Their record as a Lodge of Workmen stands well in our Order, and with the present staff of officers, who are known to be a very efficient corps, we may expect a good increase in members. The present M. W., Brother Jensen, has a happy faculty as a presiding officer to make their meetings very pleasant and agreeable to attend.

Bernal, No. 19.

A few weeks ago Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, by resolution invited Bernal Lodge, No. 19, to confer the degree on one of its applicants, and last Monday night the candidate received the Junior Workman's Degree at the hands of Bernal Lodge. After work, and as the Lodge was about to close, the members were startled by an alarm at the inner door and accompanied by the information that a delegation of ladies and gentlemen desired admission. Believing that discretion was "the better part of valor," the Lodge was closed in due form, and Brother District Deputy Lemont sent out to ascertain and report the cause of the unusual alarm. The ambassador soon returned, made a straight line to the Master who still remained at his station, whispered into his ear, retired, and soon again appeared at the door at the head of a long line of ladies and gentlemen friends of the respective Lodges. Mrs. Lemont was then introduced as the Representative of the visiting ladies and their escorts, and in a few chosen and well delivered words stated the object of the visit as one of sympathy and encouragement with aid to the members of the A. O. U. W., who had organized for the benefit of women and children. Such organizations, the lady said, should know their objects were appreciated, and hence this visitation. She then called upon Past Grand Master Barnes and Grand Lecturer Reading for addresses, which were given in a spirited manner, complimentary to the ladies and the motives which prompted the pleasant and agreeable visit. After a very enjoyable hour of music, songs and recitations, the whole company was invited to the ante rooms, where tables were spread with a most bountiful collation. Here another scene of good humor prevailed, jokes were indulged in, and altogether the entire arrangement was a complete surprise, and one long to be remembered.

Unity, No. 27.

It looked like old times in Unity on the night of their last meeting in February. The Lodge room was full of members, and the ante-room had a good batch of candidates. A careful attention to the business of the Lodge was followed by the admission of two by card and conferring the M. W. Degree on eight candidates. The youngest member was 27 years of age, the oldest 45, and the average age 32 years and six months. They bear upon their roll over 350 members in good standing, and Brother Martin, the able and veteran Financier, says he will be compelled to keep the accounts of 400 members of Unity before this term expires.

Burns, No. 68.

During this term Burns Lodge has enjoyed a season of prosperity. A suggestion was made that a reunion of the older and younger members be had, and that as far as possible the charter members act as officers of the meeting, which was held at Pythian Castle on the 28th day of February. There were about 100 members present, and the following staff of officers: John A. Doane (second M. W.), M. W.; Henry Benson (first Foreman), Foreman; Robt. Wilson (second Overseer), Overseer; Dr. Lee O. Rogers (second Recorder), Recorder; A. J. Fairweather (third Financier), Financier; A. K. Philbrook, Receiver; C. H. Vollmer (third Guide), Guide; J. M. Duncan, I. W. The following programme was rendered: Song, by "The old original quartet," Brothers Doane, Fairweather, Pohlman and DeWolf; remarks, Dr. Rogers, Med. Ex.; song, L. Vincent, M. W.; dramatic recitation, T. C. Maher; song, Felix Desmond; remarks, Dr. McLane; comic song, Gus Pohlman. After the business of the Lodge had been completed, cigars were passed and the following voluntary programme was offered in addition: Sentimental song, "Twenty Years Ago," Robt. Wilson, P. M. W.; remarks, Andrew Craig, P. M. W., J. O. Doane, J. N. Russell, P. M. W. of Los Angeles, who was visiting our city in the interest of the Mutual Endowment Association; after which all arose and sang "Auld Lang Syne."

Sts. John, No. 73.

This conservative Lodge held a grand meeting on Thursday evening, 6th inst. Brothers E. Danforth, D. G. M. W., Deputies Carroll, Poland, Jordan, Lemont and McKay were present, and as usual all made speeches that were well received. A number of the brethren of Sts. John responded in a happy vein, and thus closed a pleasant meeting.

Triumph, No. 180.

This Lodge will return to its old quarters in Red Men's Hall, Post street, on April 1st.

Noe Valley, No. 185.

The prize masquerade of No. 185 was successfully carried out, at Duveneck's Hall, corner Twenty-fourth and Church streets, on Wednesday evening, February 27th. There was a large attendance of spectators and maskers, the latter being arrayed in fine costumes. The grand march was formed at 8:30, and dancing continued until an early hour. The following is the list of prizes: Ladies' handsomest costume, silver spangles and velvet, pair handsome gold bangle bracelets, Mrs. R. H. Flood; most original character, "Snow-flake," gold lace pin, Mrs. Leon Carran; best sustained character, "Topsy," silver card receiver, Mrs. Annie Madsen; Gents' handsomest costume, "George Washington," gold headed cane, Mr. Orrin Bailey; special prize, "Crazy Quilt," gold scarf pin, Mr. F. Casement; most original character, "Grand Marshal of St. Patrick's Day," gold ring, set with amethyst, H. Lahusen; best sustained character, "Chinese Rag Picker," pair gold cuff buttons, Brother G. M. Lawton. A committee from the spectators consisting of Mrs. J. D. Thompson, Mrs. C. Dunn and Messrs. Grossman, Patterson and Hampshire awarded the prizes. A special free car for down town guests was chartered for 2 A. M. The success of this ball is, in no small degree, attributed to the energies of P. M. W.

Brother Leon Carran. The following composed the Committee of Arrangements: Leon Carran, A. V. Thompson, W. S. Symonds, George Dudley and J. C. Scott. The costume of "Rainbow" is worthy of special mention. It was worn by the wife of Brother A. V. Thompson, who has taken prizes at previous bal masques.

Evening Star, No. 23. D. of H.

The first anniversary entertainment and social of Evening Star Lodge, No. 23, Degree of Honor, was celebrated at Ixora Hall, Mission street, on Wednesday evening, March 5th. The following excellent programme was rendered: Overture, Orchestra Ixora Hall Band; remarks, Vice-President Z. T. Whitten, P. M. W.; address, P. G. M. W. Wm. H. Barnes; song, P. M. W. Sam. Booth; recitation, Master Willie Schwerin, son of Brother Charles Schwerin; Highland Fling, Master R. Talford and sister; song, Brother Gus Pohlman, P. M. W., encore; recitation, Brother Z. T. Whitten, P. M. W.; song, Walter Newman; song, little Elaine Talford. This closed the literary programme, after which dancing followed. Following are the several committees who united to make this memorable occasion a happy affair: Committee of Arrangements—Miss E. C. M. A. Sherer, President; Mr. Z. T. Whitten, Vice-President; Mr. Frederick Blight, Secretary; Mrs. E. P. Fellows, Mrs. J. K. Fishbeck, Mr. Charles Bollier, Mrs. Fahrenholz. Reception Committee—E. P. Fellows, Thomas H. Wilton, John H. Schick; John Sherer, A. Nelson, John Bannon, A. Phillips, R. G. Rice, Thomas J. Davis. Floor Manager—Miss E. C. M. A. Sherer. Floor Committee—(members Silver Spray, No. 3.), Mrs. M. Lindsay, Mrs. A. J. Lincoln, Mrs. H. Jones, Mrs. J. E. Alexander, Mrs. C. E. Sanson. (Members of Evening Star, No. 23.), Mrs. E. P. Fellows, Miss M. E. Sherer, Mrs. Thomas H. Wilton, Mrs. Z. T. Whitten, Miss Hattie Fishbeck, Mrs. A. Phillips, Mrs. Charles Schwerin. Although it was a rainy and stormy night, there was a good attendance, and every one seemed to be pleased with the evening's entertainment. This young Lodge is composed of our active and enthusiastic Workmen and members of their families.

A New D. of H. Lodge in Prospect.

Delegates from Unity, San Francisco, Spartan, Friendship and Magnolia Lodges met recently, at Relief Committee rooms, Shields' building, to consider the organizing a Degree of Honor Lodge from the Lodges of District No. 1, of which Brother George Jordan is the District Deputy. Brother Jordan acted as Chairman of the meeting, and Brother J. Hoesch Secretary. It was decided as the sense of the meeting that a Degree of Honor Lodge be organized. It was further resolved to place charter lists in each of the five Lodges for signatures. The second and fourth Thursday evenings of the month was selected as the night of meeting, it being the only night in which no Workman Lodge of the District met. The fee for initiation was fixed at $1 for charter members. "Union" was selected as the name of the new subordinate, as appropriate, in view of the Lodges of the District combining in the new enterprise. That the new proposed subordinate will flourish is assured, as District No. 1 never does anything by halves.

Since the above was put in type, we learn that the new Lodge will be instituted on next Thursday evening, at Druid's Hall, 417 Sutter street. The charter list contains upwards of 100 names, and it will no doubt be a thrifty D. of H. Lodge. Invitations have been extended to Silver Spray, No. 3, Golden Dawn, No. 10, and Evening Star, No. 23, D. of H., to be present on that occasion.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

The complimentary dramatic benefit tendered to California, No. 1, on the evening of Washington's birthday, at Deitz' Opera House, Oakland, was fairly attended, and we are informed that a neat sum was realized for the beneficiary. The original drama, Alyth, or by Love's Laws, received its first presentation at the hands of a company principally composed of amateurs, some of whom were from the families of members of California Lodge. The performance was very creditable. The following was the cast of characters: "Alyth, Baroness Everyll," Miss Mollie Allen; "Mary Prince, her Maid," Miss Maud Strachauer; "Farmer Howell," E. J. Munsch; "Joel Symms," Charles Strachauer; "Myfanwy," Miss Lena Hall; "Marget," Miss Eva Wardwell; "Gwenifer," Miss Mamie Maurhan; "Nest Trembly," Miss Dolly Young; "Nora Trembly," Louise Strachauer; "Meredith Mayne," Wm. Maurhan; "Dr. Oswald," Robert Foster; "Elisha Spraggs," Charles Hollywood; "Countess Traville," Miss Kate Russell; "Brummel," M. Strachauer; "Gov. Bronley," M. Rutherford.

Eden, No. 204.

The WATCHMAN representative had the pleasant privilege of meeting with the brethren of this Lodge at San Lorenzo, on Saturday evening, the 23d ult. Eden has 53 members in good standing, and being well officered is consequently in a prosperous condition. The members turn out well and take a good interest in the work. Affairs move along smoothly, nothing of especial interest having occurred since their successful anniversary entertainment on the 15th of last October. Henry B. Marlin, the new and efficient M. W., is a solid farmer of that vicinity. Henry Dopman is the Recorder, deservedly re-elected from term to term for several years past.

BUTTE COUNTY.

Chico, No. 58.

Chico Lodge, A. O. U. W., will hold its fourth annual picnic in Bidwell's Grove, May 1st. It is intended to make this the largest gathering the fraternity has ever held in northern California. Arrangements are being made to run excursion trains from Sacramento, Red Bluff and intermediate points. This is the only celebration we hear of, and it is very likely the Lodges of Oroville, Biggs and Gridley will participate.—Gridley Herald.

EL DORADO COUNTY.

Grizzly Flat, No. 224

Grizzly Flat Lodge has decided to give a grand ball on the evening of March 17, 1884, being the anniversary of the organization of the Lodge. The Committee of Arrangements are R. Hall, W. F. West, S. W. Moody and Fred James. No pains will be spared to make this one of the most enjoyable parties ever held at Grizzly.

MARIN COUNTY.

Saucelito, No. 20.

The brethren of Saucelito are negotiating for the San Francisco Yacht Club House for their Lodge room. This old settler has an active and enthusiastic membership, and we wish them success.

PLUMAS COUNTY.

Plumas, No. 132.

This Lodge at Greenville is in a prosperous condition, steadily adding to its members by the admission of the most desirable material for membership.

SAN BENITO COUNTY.

San Benito, No. 96.

San Benito Lodge, No. 96, A. O. U. W., of this place, is one of our most flourishing fraternal organizations. It now has about 90 members enrolled. At the last meeting nine new members were initiated. The Lodge is officered as follows: R. P. Lathrop, M. W.; R. Jose, F.; J. J. Burnett, O.; F. Sperber, Rec. (6th term); D. C. Hoffman, Fin. (7th term); W. F. Dalzell, Rvr. (7th term); A. J. Craw, G.: J. R. Woolery, I. W.; H. M. Campbell, O. W.; H. Neal and E. A. Crepin, Medical Examiners. We have been permitted to examine the last financial statement of the Supreme Recorder of the United States, and find that this organization has prospered to a greater extent in California than in any State in the Union outside of New York. The A. O. U. W. has enrolled 15,935 members in this State. During the month of December $15,997 was paid into the beneficiary fund, and $16,400 was disbursed to the widows and orphans of members of the Order. Organizations of this kind are fast growing in favor, and among the most worthy the A. O. U. W. stands on a par with any of them.—Hollister Free Lance.

SONOMA COUNTY.

Healdsburg, No. 31.

The A. O. U. W. Lodge of this city hold a check for $2,000 gold, to be presented to the widow of F. C. St. Clair, deceased, as soon as she shall come to town. It is the result of a wise forethought of her late husband in becoming a member of that Order for her benefit. We are happy to note that about 720 of our leading citizens have done likewise, and now belong to the Lodge. The expense is about $20 per year, dues and all.—Russian River Flag.

TULARE COUNTY.

Tulare, No. 78.

The grand ball given by the A. O. U. W., previously mentioned, came off on Washington's Birthday, in the warehouse of Simons, Jacobs & Co. It is said that 60 tickets were sold, aggregating the nice sum of $100. Quite a number were here from adjoining towns. The final break-up was not until daylight because of the exceedingly good time and the train being late.—Tulare Journal.

UTAH.

Prospective Grand Lodge Reception.

From the Park Mining Record we learn that a large number of delegates from the various Lodges of the A. O. U. W. of this Territory met recently in the Walker House, Salt Lake City, for the purpose of making arrangements for a grand entertainment and ball in honor of the first meeting of the Grand Lodge within the Territory of Utah. The meeting was organized with Thomas Cupit, of Ontario Lodge, No. 1, in the chair, and Thomas Poser, of Fidelity, No. 3, as Secretary. After due deliberation it was resolved to celebrate the event of the first meeting of the Grand Lodge in Utah by a grand ball and entertainment on Tuesday evening, May 20, 1884, and that all members of the Order in the Jurisdiction be invited to attend. The expense of the ball is to be borne by the Lodges of the Territory pro rata on the membership thereof. The Secretary was requested to forward the resolutions to the Lodges for their action.

CENTRAL M. E. CHURCH SOCIAL.—On Friday evening, February 29th, a reception and social was given at the parlors of the Central M. E. Church that was a very pleasant and enjoyable affair. There was a large attendance, and a goodly number of the company were Workmen and their families. The following select programme was given: Piano duet, Misses Meacham and Carrick, whose artistic effort was highly appreciated; recitation, Mr. H. Summerhayes; piano solo, Mr. Hester; sentimental song and encore, Prof. Frank Perkins, Organist of Spartan; recitation, Miss Linda Hoag. The literary exercises were followed by sociability and ice cream free, which was served ad libitum by the young ladies. Brother Dille, pastor, helped to enliven the company by extending a warm and cordial greeting to all, young and old. The efficient Committee, Brother Hammond, chairman; Mrs. Hoag, Mrs. Emmal, the Misses Emmal, Miss Hilman and Miss Heath are deserving of especial mention for their management and success of this recherche affair.

The Catholic Church and the A. O. U. W.

We are permitted to publish the following letter from Archbishop Alemany received over a year ago by Wm. H. Barnes, then Grand Master of this State, as showing the attitude of the Catholic Church towards our Order:

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 4, 1883.

DEAR SIR:—In answer to your esteemed favor of the 2d inst., I beg to thank you first for the information you furnish regarding the A. O. U. W.

Inasmuch as the constant association of Catholics with believers of every other denomination, and no denomination at all naturally tend to weaken their faith, it is always customary to advise Catholics to attach themselves to Catholic Societies, if there be such which would furnish the same pecuniary or other advantages, rather than join one that is not Catholic.

Yet, the Church does not positively condemn a society unless she believes that such society is hostile either to the civil government or to Christianity.

I must confess that I am not perfectly well informed about your Order at present, and hence cannot say what I think it may result in; but I am glad to say that so far as my limited knowledge goes I do not see anything in it that would cause the Church to condemn it, therefore, while as I have said, I would naturally prefer that Catholics would join Catholic Societies that furnish equal inducements, and I think we have one, at least, on the Coast that does, still I am not prepared to say that a Catholic must withdraw from your Society or must not enter it. Trusting that this covers the matter sufficiently, and thanking you again for your esteemed favor, stating object, method of procedure, etc., of the A. O. U. W., I beg to remain very respectfully,

Your humble servant,

J. S. ALEMANY.

To W. H. BARNES, Esq., G. M. W.

Practical Fraternity.

Under the heading, "Is the A. O. U. W. an Insurance Company, or is it a Fraternal Order?" an Eastern paper has the following item of local interest:

Some little time ago Brother Joseph Isaacs came to New York from San Francisco, Cal., bearing with him a withdrawal card from Harmony Lodge, No. 9, of that city. He had not been here many days when he was taken suddenly and severely ill, and having no friends and still holding his card for an opportunity to connect himself with a Lodge in this city that would suit his conveniences and taste, he was admitted to the Mount Sinai Hospital, and grew rapidly worse, until it was evident that his lease of life had nearly expired. He informed the hospital officials that he was a Workman, and from a copy of the Empire State Workman learned the names of the various Lodges in the city, selecting Empire City as the one to make known his condition and other facts concerning his connection with the Order. A letter was written for him directed to Master Workman Loneragan, of that Lodge, setting forth the above facts and asking for relief, stating that he was entitled to seven dollars per week from his own Lodge. A sum of money was drawn from the funds of the Lodge, and correspondence opened by Recorder Ackerman with Harmony Lodge, which resulted in verifying his statements, and ordering them to pay the relief and draw on Harmony for the same. Brother Loneragan started for the hospital to deliver said relief and care for the wants of the strange Brother, but when he reached there he found that death had preceded him only a few hours. His remains were taken charge of by Empire City Lodge, and the funeral services took place under their direction on Sunday last, and the amount of his sick benefit, $35, was paid to the widow of deceased Brother. Brother Ackerman has officially notified his Lodge of his death and burial, and Empire City Lodge will further the interest of the widow in securing her $2,000.

ARE we a fraternity? Judge Utt's Iowa decision in another column is given on the ground that we are. He says: "To me, the decisive point in the case is whether the A. O. U. W. is a fraternal organization, or whether it is merely an insurance organization. I believe it to be a fraternal organization, and being such, the Courts cannot interfere with its trials and disciplinary action so long as property rights are not involved."

TIME'S current may wear wrinkles in the face, but not reach the heart.

A. O. U. W. Hall Association.

The Hall Directors have held several meetings since our last issue. The matter of a hall for the A. O. U. W. is meeting with great favor, upwards of $25,000 having already been subscribed. The Board of Directors, all representative men of the Order, are pushing matters as fast as possible. It was thought that by this time a lot would have been selected and a prospectus issued to the members of the Order. The lot that the committee had decided upon was on Tyler, near Market, but when the bargain was about to close, it was found that the same was somewhat encumbered, and it would have taken at least two years to right matters. The Directors, at their meeting on Wednesday evening last, decided to drop this lot, and gave the Committee on Sites (consisting of Brothers J. N. Block, of Unity, E. F. Loud, of Valley, and F. E. Alexander, of Spartan) further time, until the next regular meeting, which will be on the last Saturday of the month, when the Committee will surely select a lot. Brothers of the Order desiring to see the Order flourish and have a home of its own, should not fail to subscribe for at least one share of stock before it is too late.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS U. S. and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

ADJUSTABLE STEP-LADDER.—Edwin Markwick, Pinckney, Shasta Co., Cal. The object of this invention is to provide a ladder adapted for various heights, and which can be readily adjusted to any kind of surface, level, sloping or uneven, and at the same time may be easily transported from place to place, thereby fitting it for many uses besides those obvious ones to which a ladder is put. It consists of a two-part, or double ladder, hinged together at the base and mounted upon a single-wheeled frame, and having a back leg-brace in common, serving for either when in position; and in peculiarly adjustable extension legs with the device. The ladder is specially useful in an orchard, for the pruning of trees and for picking fruit. It can be very readily moved about. One does not have to block up the ladder to make it stand firm; and being thus firm, a man is perfectly safe on top of it. The short ladder is useful to work underneath the limbs; the main ladder on the outside of the tree. The shipping weight of this ladder is fifty pounds. The main ladder is nine feet high; short one five feet. When the short ladder is in position for use it forms and takes the place of a wheel-barrow to move the fruit from place to place. These ladders can be made to any desired size by the Union Box Factory, in this city, or by the inventor. With the general ladder one can reach to a distance of sixteen feet from the ground.

ORNAMENTATION OF FRAME MOULDINGS.—P. E. Francke, S. F., No. 292,552, dated January 29, 1884. This ornamentation of frame and other mouldings consists of a means for forming and applying the plastic material of which the ornaments are composed, so that it is formed and applied to the moulding in a continuous strip, by means of a cylindrical pattern drum or wheel. In the ordinary ornamentation a plastic material is employed, and this is usually formed in lengths by a straight pattern or mould, into which it is compressed, and afterwards is fixed or cemented on the moulding. This process is slow, and the new invention is intended to displace it, and produce a continuous strip and attach it at one operation.

HINGE.—William Patterson, S. F., No. 292,574, dated January 29, 1884. This is a device for lubricating hinges or butts of that class, having two leaves; the pintle projecting upward from the lower part of one, while the socket is formed on the upper part of the opposite leaf, known as "loose half-butts." It consists of a cup or sleeve surrounding the pintle and extending a short distance upward from the shoulder upon which the socket rests. The socket has its lower end formed with a channel or groove between itself and the plate or leaf, so that it can extend down into the cup, the edges of which thus extend up into the groove. The socket is open at the top to admit oil, and an ornamental screw-cap closes it.

BED-LOUNGE.—August Hansen, S. F., No. 292,556, dated January 29, 1884. This improved bed-lounge has a supplemental set of legs and there are means for operating the same when the back is let down to form a bed, whereby the bed is elevated and caused to stand higher than when used as a sofa or lounge. The patent covers also certain details of construction.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our member ship will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this the oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

REMITTANCES to this office should be made by postal order or registered letter, when practicable. Cost of postal order, for $15 or less, 10 cts.; for registered letter, in addition to regular postage (at 3 cts. per half ounce), 10 cts.

TRUE friendship, genuine love, and self-sacrificing charity cannot be inculcated by mere meeting together and going through the routine laid down for the systematic transaction of business. The Order of Business is but a guiding post in the path of our official walk; the opportunities which this walk affords for familiar intercourse and the cultivation of brotherly interest, are the principal advantages of our weekly meetings. In the Lodge room we are afforded an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the moral and intellectual worth of each other; by mingling together we polish down the rough edges of character, which, if left in a rough state, would prove unsightly spots to hide or disfigure the beautiful traits beneath. It is around our fraternal altar that true and lasting friendships are formed, which death alone can sever.

No nobler thought ever emanated from the human mind than the heavenly injunction, "Do ye to others as ye would that others should do to you." The obligation is incumbent upon us as children of a common Father, and from the earliest records, even prior to the Christian era, we find nations existed whom philosophers taught, in substance if not in words, the same Divine command. This injunction is assumed by us in our fraternal relation, one with another, and in our Councils and Lodges we morally agree to observe the same; and this necessitates a careful investigation as to the character, morally as well as socially, of candidates who desire to affiliate with us, that we may have no scruples as to our duties fraternally one to another.

THERE is a time in every man's education when he arrives at the conviction that envy is ignorance; that imitation is suicide; that he must take himself for better or for worse, as his portion; that, though the wide universe is full of good, no kernel of nourishing corn can come to him but through his toil bestowed on that plot of ground which is given him to till.—Emerson.

DON'T be a clam—receiving but not imparting. Attend your meetings; speak for the "Good of the Order;" invite, yes, urge your friends to come with you and share its inestimable privileges, for in this way only can you fulfill the sacred duties you owe the Order.

YOU have perhaps been present at the election and have done your duty on the occasion. Possibly you attended the installation and participated in the social exercises that followed. Do not imagine you have done your entire duty. Work remains to be done throughout the year.

IF disposed to growl or scowl when an assessment is called, pause a moment and ask if you would like similar treatment from the brothers who may be called on to respond to the claims of your beneficiaries not long hence.

THE dynamite outrages in London have called out some strong expressions from the press in regard to the duty of the United States in the matter.

Some of the Pleasant Features of Being a Representative.

Some people have very lofty ideas of the pleasures which are experienced by a Representative to Grand bodies and conventions, which are not always realized. Not a few are pronounced in their assertions that all these excursions are for pure and unadulterated pleasure, but to prove that the reverse is frequently the case, the Empire State Workman produces a copy of "hotel regulations" which confronted a Representative to a recent Eastern convention upon taking the apartment assigned to hold his precious carcass during his stay. It says: "We have not only the gentleman's word that the circumstances were true, but a printed copy of the document." We would preface these rules further by the remark that they may apply to Eastern caravansaries and "hash-foundries," but they are wholly inapplicable to our San Francisco hotels, especially those whose advertisements are found in this journal. These "rules" are merely reproduced as a contrast of Eastern with Western civilization:

Some New Hotel Rules.

Rates $3 per day.
Any hints about slop coffee will be charged at the rate of 25 cents per hint.
No extra charge for damp sheets. Rheumatism always on hand.
Our beefsteak is cast to order at one of the largest foundries in the country, and can always be depended on as fresh.
Guests desiring napkins with holes in them will please give notice at the office 20 minutes before meal time.
Our meat cook is an old, experienced miner and sapper, and is provided with picks, crowbars, torpedoes, fuses, etc.
Guests who wash their shirts in the water bowl will be charged two shillings each. We cannot encourage cleanliness in this hotel.
Children will not be allowed to play in the halls. A beautiful mill-pond will be found two blocks below to drown them in.
We call especial attention to our beds. The mattresses are made of the best quality of scrap iron, and the pillows are warranted to be of hard wood and thoroughly seasoned.
The carpets in the bed-rooms have been in use upwards of 25 years. We can therefore recommend them without reserve.
Parties who look as if they might find fault with our particular brand of butter, will please pay in advance.
To call a servant—press the button quickly. If you don't get one under an hour and a half you may know that your bell is out of order.
The towels furnished guests are the invention of a Wisconsin man. They are warranted superior to any other shingles in the market.

There is a safe in the office for the storage of money and valuables, but in case the night clerk skips with the pile the hotel will not be responsible.
Sour oranges, cheap raisins and wormy apples carried to rooms will be charged extra.

Guests desiring hay-seed mixed with their tea will please give notice at the office. Otherwise it will be all hay-seed.
Please report any inattention of servants. We expect you to fee the porter, steward, chambermaid and waitress; to pay double for boot-blackening and barbering; to put up with flies, dust, dirt and other trifles; to pay half a dollar to ride up, and as much more to get back to the depot; but inattention to servants is something we can't permit.

Any one wishing to enjoy a Turkish steam or mineral bath in his own home can do so by procuring Galland's patent folding cabinet, 227 Post street.

PACIFIC GROVE RETREAT.—This Christian seaside resort and "Campers' Paradise" is now open for the reception of visitors. During the year of 1883 over 1,500 lots were sold, and the demand for lots has been so great that an additional plot has been surveyed, and will be put on the market. An unlimited supply of water from the Carmel river has been introduced, avenues laid out, the grounds beautified, and increased accommodations provided for families who wish to "keep house" or board at a restaurant at very moderate charges. This "Haven of Rest" is attracting visitors from all parts of the world who wish to recuperate and escape the sultry heat of the summer season. For further information address J. O. Johnson, Superintendent Pacific Grove, Monterey, Cal.

CANTALIAN.—This natural mineral water was discovered by an accident. F. W. Hatch, M. D., permanent Secretary of the State Board of Health, says it is the most wonderful natural water supply which has ever been brought to his notice. The analysis of Prof. Price, M. D., shows at once sulphur, salt, carbonate, alkaline and slightly ferruginous water. It is one of the remarkable discoveries of the age, and hundreds have been permanently cured of rheumatism, catarrhal affections, diseases of the kidneys and liver, dyspepsia and neuralgia, as appears from sworn testimonials. A company has been incorporated to furnish this valuable mineral water in quantities to suit the growing demand. Bros. Forbes and Davenport, corner of Fourth and Market, are the sole agents for the Pacific coast.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times), by turning a leaf.

Windsor House.

The next annual session of the Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., of California, will be held at B'nai B'rith Hall, 121 Eddy street, San Francisco, on Tuesday, April 1st. Located as it is, within two blocks of the above hall, the Windsor House offers superior advantages to any other hotel in the city for the delegates to make their headquarters. It is situated at the corner of Market and Fifth streets, within one block of the Baldwin Theater, the Tivoli, U. S. Mint, Metropolitan Temple and Lincoln Grammar School, and with nearly all the main lines of street cars passing its doors. The Windsor is thus made easy of access to the Park, Cliff House and Ocean Beach, Woodward's Gardens and other points of interest in the city.

We therefore take pleasure in calling the attention of the delegates to this fact, assuring them that under the efficient management of Brothers Warschauer they will find as good accommodations as can be found anywhere in the city, and the prices will be found very reasonable.

The house contains more than 200 large, airy and well-furnished rooms, facing on three of the principal streets, and the table is at all times supplied with the best the market affords, while only white help is employed in all departments, and every care is taken to insure the comfort of the guests.

The proprietors (P. M. W.), representing their respective Lodges in the Grand Lodge, will be found kind, genial, courteous and fraternal, and we heartily recommend them and the popular "Windsor" to all delegates to the Grand Lodge and the Order at large.

A very well executed engraving of the Windsor will be found on another page of this journal.

THE LATEST NOVELTY connected with a ladies' toilet is luminous jewelry. M. Gaston Trouve, the well-known electrician of Paris, has lately designed a series of ornaments for ladies' wear, which consists of glass colored and cut to imitate rubies, diamonds, etc., fitted in an envelope surrounding a small incandescent lamp of low resistance. The light shines through the pieces of glass only, and gives them all the appearance of the stones they are intended to imitate. The lamp is fed from a small battery which is carried about the person. It is composed of three pairs of zinc carbon plates (two carbons to one zinc), or a larger number, according to the current required. These plates dip in a saturated solution of bichromate of potash, which is contained by an ebonite cell with three compartments. The plates are fitted into a cover, which is kept securely down on the top of the cell by two bands of India rubber passed around the whole. Finally, the battery is encased in two sheets of gutta percha, so as to entirely prevent any leakage. A miniature switch is carried in the pocket or elsewhere within reach, to which the battery and lamp wires are connected. The pressure of a finger on the arm of the switch makes or breaks communication with the lamp. The battery weighs (with six plates) 300 grams, and will work about thirty minutes with a two or three volt lamp. A larger battery to work a four or eight volt lamp weighs 800 grams.

A SHIP RAILWAY ACROSS SUEZ.—Dates from Athens of January 10th, says the London Standard, state that a scheme has been presented to the Porte by a Mr. de Leon, representing large American interests, which is intended to replace Admiral Inglefield's project of connecting the Mediterranean and Red seas by submerging the Jordan valley. This new scheme consists of the construction of a ship railway, which, starting from El Arish, on the Mediterranean, would have its terminus on the Akba, on the Red Sea. The actual cost of the line—as it would pass through a perfectly flat country—would not amount to an exaggerated sum, although the expense of keeping up the permanent way, consequent upon the transport over it of vessels of heavy tonnage, may be so great as to render competition, on even terms with its Suez rival, somewhat difficult. In the event of a successful issue of the present negotiations, Mr. de Leon is likely to be rewarded by the American government with a high diplomatic post at Constantinople.

IRON RAILS BECOMING OBSOLETE.—The production of iron rails seems to have ceased substantially, at least in England and this country, and 1883, apparently, is likely to be very near the date of their disappearance. In that year only 25,000 tons of iron rails were exported from Great Britain, out of a total of 770,000, the total being within 8,000 tons of the great quantity annually exported from this country for twelve years or more. In 1878, when the total British rail exports were but 358,759 tons, 30 per cent of the whole were iron rails; last year only 34 per cent of the whole were of iron.

Worth Millions to the Human Family—Celery as a Cure.

The habitual daily use of this vegetable is much more beneficial to man than most people imagine. The writer, who is familiar with its virtues, is acquainted with many men and women who from various causes have become so much affected by nervousness that when they stretched out their hands they shook like aspen leaves, but by a moderate use of celery they became as strong in nerve as other people. We have known others to be cured of palpitation of the heart. To this we may add that we received of Dr. Henley, of Portland, Oregon, a bottle of "Celery, Beef and Iron." By close analysis we state the preparation called Celery, Beef and Iron is what it is represented to be, absolutely pure, and every one engaged in labor weakening to the nerves should use "Celery, Beef and Iron." We find also according to the formula received, each bottle is composed of Liebig's extract of beef, extract of celery, and pyrophosphate of iron with condensed wine. These combined we pronounce the best known remedy for any disorder of the nerves or neuralgia. The most delicate nerves, even of birds, we give celery, how much better will it subserve the wants of the human family?—Prof. B. H. Openheigen in Journal of Chemistry.

About Obtaining Patents.

Patents are Virtually Contracts

Between inventors and the public. The consideration flowing from both parties to the contract is expressly fixed by statute. The Government requires the following consideration in every case: First, that an applicant for a patent shall disclose a new and useful improvement, of which he is the first and original inventor. Second, that the invention has not been patented, or published in a printed publication prior to the date of his invention. Third, that the invention has not been in public use, or on sale, more than two years prior to his application for a patent. Fourth, that the invention shall be properly described and claimed in the specification forming a part of the patent. Provided an inventor complies strictly with these conditions, the Government guarantees that the inventor shall have the exclusive right to make, use and sell the thing invented for the term of seventeen years.

The Patent Law provides that in case a patent, which is the evidence of the contract, is not executed in compliance with the requirements of the law, it may be annulled and rendered void. Hence, it is of the greatest importance to every inventor that his patent or contract be skillfully and accurately drafted, that it may afford him complete protection for his invention during the life of his patent.

Secure a Good Patent.

An inventor should first ascertain whether or not his improvement has been patented by another. This requires an exhaustive search among all the patents in the class to which the invention relates. This question can often be answered gratuitously by us, immediately on receiving full information of the invention, by reason of our long and extensive practice as patent solicitors and editors and publishers of first-class, scientific and industrial journals, during the past 20 years and over. When the question of priority of invention is not so readily to be determined, it is generally best to make what is termed a "preliminary examination," by searching through the patent office reports among the patents in the class to which the invention relates, and referring to our extensive patent library, containing compilations of special classes of American and foreign inventions, mechanical dictionaries, scientific encyclopedias, files of scientific and mechanical newspapers, and an immense number of patent applications by inventors of the Pacific coast, carefully filed by this office since 1860.

If, by this "preliminary examination," the improvement is found to have been previously invented, our client will receive, for the small sum of $5 for the examination, a verbal or written report showing definitely whereby his invention has been anticipated, thereby saving him further expense and perhaps much time, useless delay, anxiety, etc.

To avoid all unnecessary delay, however, in securing patents at the earliest moment practicable, inventors will do well to forward a model, drawing or sketch, with a plain, full and comprehensive description of their invention (stating distinctly what the particular points of improvement are), with $15 as a first installment of fees. If the improvement appears to us to be novel and patentable, the necessary papers for an application for a patent will be prepared immediately, and forwarded to the inventor for his signature. When the inventor receives the application and finds it duly prepared, he will carefully sign and return the same plainly addressed to us, with postal money order or express receipt for our own fee. The case will then be promptly filed by us in the Patent Office, and vigorously prosecuted to secure the best patent possible. [This course is the most expeditious and satisfactory, as no time is lost in transmitting correspondence relative to the preliminary steps to be taken.] When the patent is allowed the inventor will be duly notified, and on sending the final Government fee of $20 to us, we will order the issue of the patent, and forward the same as soon as it is secured from the Patent Office.

The payments are thus divided and made easy. We make no pretence of doing cheap work, in order to entice custom, nor do we afterward make additional charges to bring the bill up to a fair compensation. We do our work honestly and thoroughly, and we never give a case up as long as there is a chance to obtain a patent. The Agency charge is from $25 to $30, or sometimes more, if the invention is intricate or complicated, or requires much labor. Drawings cost from $5 upward, according to their number and the time employed, and, if a model is sent, the express charges upon this and the papers must be added. The total cost, in addition to Government fees, rarely exceeds $40, and for this we do all we can without appealing the case.

When the invention consists of a new article of manufacture, or a new composition, samples of the separate ingredients sufficient to make the experiment and also of the manufactured article itself, must be furnished.

Models and Drawings.

Models are now seldom required by the Commissioner of Patents, and generally only in intricate cases. Perfect drawings of practical working machines are considered more satisfactory to the Patent Office than the old and more cumbersome system of storing up an immense bulk of almost numberless models.

Drawings or sketches, sufficient to illustrate clearly the invention, with a sufficient description to enable us to make a full set of perfect drawings for the Patent Office is all that we require. A model will answer our purpose as well however, in cases where the inventor can more easily furnish it for our use.

The value and even the validity of a patent often depends on the character, clearness and sufficiency of its drawings. There are thousands of existing patents in which the improvements are but partially or very poorly illustrated in the drawings. When an attempt is made to dispose of such patents, the vagueness and defects of the drawings often prejudice capitalists and manufacturers against the invention, while in reality it may be of great value, and would meet with ready sale had the invention been fully portrayed by artistic and skillfully executed drawings. Again, when patents of this character are brought into court, the uncertainty and ambiguity of the drawings enable the opposing experts to mystify the judges as to the construction or combination of parts tended to be covered by the patentees. In all cases prepared by us, the drawings are made under our personal supervision, by skilled draftsmen in our constant employ, and every precaution is taken that the invention is fully and clearly shown by different views, so that the improvement will be readily understood by the Examiners in the Patent Office, and comprehended by the public when the patent is granted.

In the Patent Office

The application is assigned to the Examiner having charge of the class to which the invention relates. The case must then take its turn with others in the order of filing, and in due time is carefully examined to test the novelty of the invention. If the examiner fails to find anything that anticipates the invention, a patent is immediately allowed, provided the specification and claims are drafted in proper form. Should the Examiner find a prior patent which, in his opinion, anticipates one or more of the claims in the application, a letter of rejection is sent to the attorney in charge of the case; and, if the attorney coincides with the views of the Examiner, the claims rejected are erased. In preparing applications for patents, an attorney should be careful to familiarize himself with the class of inventions to which the application pertains, so that the specification and claims may be drafted as nearly perfect in the first instance as is possible. This course saves much time in prosecuting the application to a patent.

When claims are improperly rejected on patents which do not anticipate the spirit or wording of the claims, proper steps are immediately taken to convince the Examiner of his error. This is done, in most part, by personal arguments, as the differences in construction, operation, function and results are more readily discovered and appreciated by an oral presentation of the facts than can possibly be done by relying solely on written arguments. In order that the Patent Office record of the patents shall be complete, an oral argument is generally supplemented by a manuscript brief, that others, in examining the files at any future time may clearly comprehend the position taken by the Examiner and attorney in prosecuting the case to patent.

In addition to our own personal attention to the interest of our clients here, we have, for over 12 years past, had constantly in association with us in Washington, one of the soundest legal counselors and ablest of practitioners in patent business in this country, who carefully attends in person to our business at the Patent Office, and has attained success in a most marked degree.

Perfect Claims.

The value and force of a patent are dependent on its claims. A patent may disclose to the public the most important and valuable invention, and yet the claim be of such meager scope that the patent is actually worthless. When the claims of a patent are so loosely drafted that infringers can flood the market with improvements, differing from the improvement disclosed by the patent only in slight changes in construction and arrangements of parts, such a patent is valueless to the owner, as it fails to afford him that exclusive and complete protection guaranteed by the Patent Law. Hence it is that the greatest care skill and perseverance are required, first, in properly drafting the claims in the first instance, and second, in prosecuting the application before the Patent Office, and maintaining the rights of the inventor to claims as broad and sweeping as the invention will warrant. This latter is no easy task. The Examiners of the Patent Office serve in the capacity of attorneys guarding the interests of the public. It is their sworn duty to exercise the greatest care and watchfulness, that patentees do not secure claims of greater scope than they are justly entitled to. It is but natural that Examiners are sometimes in error as to just what scope should be accorded an invention. Although the Examiners act under honest convictions in cases where they refuse an inventor his just rights, yet it is the duty of the attorney to maintain the claims of his client, if he is convinced that they are just and proper. To succeed in this requires the display of tact, firmness and ability; and when the Examiner is made to see that the inventor is honestly and fairly entitled to the claims which have been rejected, he will almost invariably recede from his former action, and allow the case.

Advantages to Inventors on the Pacific Coast.

The firm of DEWEY & Co. (continuously editors and publishers of the MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS, nearly from its early commencement in 1860) offer comparatively far better facilities to the local inventors of the Pacific States and Territories than are possessed by any other agents in America. Members of the firm give personal attention to the applications entrusted to their care. They have been longer in practice in patent soliciting than most agents who are still personally engaged in the business. They have secured more U. S. and foreign patents in the past 20 years (with very few exceptions) than any other firm still existing. Their practice has been so successful and long continued, that the great majority of inventions on this side of the American continent have been patented through their agency, thus affording them great and valuable experience, by thorough information of the true principles and points of novelty in the inventions, whether general in character or peculiarly local to this coast.

The extensive business combination and experience of this firm, is undoubtedly one of the most fortunate in existence for affording inventors prompt and reliable advice, and the best possible facilities for securing their full patent rights with safety and dispatch at uniformly reasonable rates.

Every patentee of a worthy invention is guaranteed the gratuitous publication of a clearly-stated and correct description of his invention, in one or more of our influential and reliable newspapers, affording just the circulation that is best calculated to widely inform the class of readers most specially interested in the subject of his invention.

Saving of Time, Etc.

Inventors on this coast will find that owing to our familiarity with inventors and local agents, we can more readily and fully comprehend their wants, and thus save much of the time ordinarily consumed in preliminary writing back and forth when distant agencies are employed.

Caveats.

A caveat is a confidential communication made to the Patent Office, and is therefore filed within its secret archives. The privilege secured under a caveat is that it entitles the caveator to receive notice, for a period of one year, of any application for a patent subsequently filed, and which is adjudged to be novel, and is likely to interfere with the invention described in the caveat, and the caveator is then required to complete his application for a patent within three months from the date of said notice. Caveat papers should be very carefully prepared. Our fee for the our office varies from $10 to $20. The Government fee is $10 additional.

To enable us to prepare caveat papers, we only require a sketch and description of the invention.

Rejected Applications.

Inventors who have rejected cases (prepared either by themselves, or for them by other agents), who desire to ascertain their prospects of success by further efforts, are invited to avail themselves of our unrivaled facilities for securing favorable results. We have been successful in securing Letters Patent in many previously abandoned cases. Our terms are always reasonable.

Inventors who do business with us will be notified of the state of their application in the Patent Office, if it is possible for us to do so.

What is Electricity?

Electricity is the most stupendous force in nature, apparently active throughout the universe, the cause of the phenomena described as attraction, gravitation and magnetism, and most probably of heat and light. It is incessantly active, and maintains, it would seem, the physical life of the world. Science can only appreciate some of its results, and apply it on a very limited scale to practical purposes; but knowledge of its adaptability is growing every day, and what a few years since was little more than material for brilliant laboratory experiments or the production of scientific toys, is now becoming a gigantic motive power available for the service of practical science and the progress of civilization.

Already it provides a means of instantaneous communication between portions of the earth's surface, most remote from each other. It is gradually superseding all other methods of artificial illumination, and it promises to make steam obsolete as a motive power. What other aid it may give, we know not, and we scarcely dare conjecture, although it would seem that the most vivid imagination must fail to apprehend its possibilities. It is in the earth beneath us, known as terrestrial magnetism; it is in the atmosphere around us, and its energy is seen in the lightning flashes which mark the discharge of force between clouds, each of which is a storage of force; and in the vast, indeed inconceivable, kosmos, electricity maintains the relations of suns and systems moving with enormous velocity and unvarying regularity through space. It is a force which, so far as human intellect can appreciate it, knows no cessation, diminution or deterioration. It can be summoned but not created by any skill of man—made apparent in the results of friction or chemical action, but made apparent only, not produced. A spark the eighth of an inch long, produced by contact with the small electric machine in the lecture room is precisely similar in character to the terrible flash which splits a tree to fragments, striking it with sudden death, or topples down the most massive tower reared by the skill of man. In Oriental fable, we read of lamps, the rubbing of which produced an obedient genius ready to minister to every wrath. We can excite the electric force, and the most stupendous of all the genii nature—if not, indeed, the master-spirit, of which all known natural forces are but variations—is at our service; our servant, if we will—our most terrible master if we have no skill to conciliate him.—Beeton's Dictionary of Science.

AN IMPROVED CANNON.—At the French gun factory near Lille has recently been finished a cannon which presents some peculiarities of proportion and shape, but whose chief novelty is a compact wrapping of fine wire around it as tightly as possible by an engine constructed for the purpose. Preliminary tests have shown that the resisting strength of the gun metal is more largely increased by this device than it could be from an equal weight of similar metal cast with the tube itself; but whether or not the wire will stand the strain of continued use can only be decided by the severer tests which are now about to be applied.

A WATCH RUN BY ELECTRICITY.—A German watchmaker has invented a watch to run by electricity, which, it is thought by good judges, will effect a revolution in watchmaking. These watches are without springs, and the works consist of only two wheels. The second hand moves with momentary leaps, like the expensive stop watch. It is also said that the watch can be used for the purposes of telegraphy.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell streets, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER'S HEADQUARTERS—Office, No. 234 Post street, San Francisco, Cal. JAMES SIMPSON, M. D.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

THE finances of the Grand Lodge are in very good condition, and we shall begin the new term without a burden of debt to RECORDERS, Financiers and Receivers should bear in mind that the Grand Lodge has no authority to confer the degree of Past Master on any such that have not served three years consecutively in their respective positions, nor then except they come with a recommendation from the Lodge to which they belong. No doubt the law will be strictly adhered to.

IN reporting suspensions, Recorders should report them as having occurred on the day after the 28th of the month, without reference to the time of the Lodge meeting at which that we have lost during the last year about five members from other causes to one by death. It has been so from the beginning, not only here but elsewhere. The same is true of all other like organizations. This explains the reason of the low number of assessments of benefit Orders. All the money paid by persons who quit the Order before they die is clean gain to those who remain. If every member who joins should remain in the Order till he died, our assessments instead of being 17 or 18 a year would be about five times as many in the long run. Life insurance companies like-

Berkeley and Surroundings.

We deem it quite an appropriate time to present to our readers a view of Berkeley and surroundings. On March 22d, was celebrated the sixteenth anniversary of the establishment of the State University at this beautiful spot. The picture is taken from the hills at the rear of the town, and shows the principal buildings of the University and the delightful view beyond, showing a portion of the bay, San Francisco, Alcatraz and the Golden Gate. To friends visiting San Francisco, we know of no more delight-hamper our efforts. Another year of like business prosperity will probably warrant a reduction of the per capita tax, which is already lower than that of most other similar societies.

REPRESENTATIVES to the Grand Lodge are invited to make this office their headquarters during the session. The latch-string hangs outside the door, so to speak.

THE sessions of the Grand Lodge will be held in B'nai B'rith Hall, on Eddy street, which joins Market at the Baldwin Hotel. From the Baldwin it is only three blocks.

suspensions are reported. It is not the Lodge that suspends but the law, and reports should accord with the facts.

THE recent storms cut off some of our remote Lodges from all communication by mail for almost a month.

THE law suspends such members as fail to pay the relief assessment (unless where paid from the General Fund of the Lodge), the same as in case of any other assessment. Suspension occurs on the 29th of March.

It appears from the records of this office wise reap their richest profits from lapsed policies.

THE editor of the Fraternal Censor (N. Y.) puts the following pertinent query: "Will some intelligent brother inform us how a fraternal editor can publish all the doings of 306 Lodges unless some one in each one of these Lodges sends in the news?"

By an error in the make-up of our last issue, several short items found their way into the Grand Recorder's department, the appearance of which in that place might be considered strange without this explanation, ful short excursion, that we can recommend, than a visit to the "City of Oaks," the birthplace of Workmanship in this State, and its beautiful and classic suburb, Berkeley.

THE special edition of the WATCHMAN published to be circulated in the Grand Lodge has a full list of the delegates in attendance, etc. This we will make arrangements to publish in our next issue, which will have a full report of the Grand Lodge proceedings, so as to give the benefit of this list to all our subscribers.

The Fireside.

In the Barley Field.

(Written by E. L.)

All down the dewy barley
The morning calls me near;
And sweetening every moment
The linnet's song I hear.
The light is pure and silvery,
The warm-souled poppy blows,
And rich about my pathway
The dewy barley grows.

All down the distant meadow
In stately, jeweled rows,
Ten thousand banners herald
The softest wind that blows.
The light is pure and silvery,
The high mist sweeps away;
The lark with crystal changes,
Keeps ringing up the day.

Far down the dreamy meadow,
I tread the tender grass;
And breathe the broken fragrance
Exhaling as I pass.
The air is pure and silvery—
A mirror bright and still,
Where shine the flowered reaches
Across the clear-cut hill.

All in the emerald barley,
Where pearls were thickly strewn,
The morning hides her jewels,
Before the glance of noon.
The light grows warm and golden,
In cool, luxuriant rows,
Where wait the tired songsters,
The dewy barley grows.

Compensations.

(Written by E. L.)

We are all tempted at times to think somewhat enviously of those who are blessed with an abundance of this world's wealth. As we look around us and see so many things in our outward circumstances which we could change for the better we sigh for the means of gratifying our tastes, and of giving added comfort to those who are dear to us. The house seems small and narrow, its unfinished walls offensive to the eye, and we think how delightful it would be to build for ourselves an ideal home untrammelled by any idea of expense. Sometimes we even go so far as to plan it in all its details—the castle in the air which is to be ours when fortune smiles upon us. Doubtless it is very charming, very delightful, very comfortable; but dear friends, if you are a dweller in one of our inexpensive, rapidly constructed California houses, did you ever think how much you would lose by exchanging it for something different?

There are compensations in almost every condition of life; and we who live in these simple country homes may find one which is not to be despised in the delight of listening to "the rain upon the roof."

Do you imagine that any one inhabiting a plastered house enjoyed that delicious music as you and I did during the weeks which have just passed by? In the upper chamber, with its open rafters—nothing but the shingles between sleeper and the sky—how more than pleasant it was to lie and listen to the falling of the rain—the blessed rain, bringing its benediction to hundreds and thousands of homes throughout the State.

I know of one household, at least, where even the early hours usually kept were anticipated, and old and young went to bed in advance of the ordinary bedtime, simply for the pleasure of hearing the rain upon the roof.

One of its messages to me in the darkness of the night seemed to be this: The recognition of the truth that this law of compensation underlies much of our daily life, had we but eyes to see.

What if we should look for it a little? Will it be a waste of time? Mary's cloak begins to look decidedly shabby. You sigh because you cannot afford to give her a new one. Then, driven by necessity to see what can be done, you discover that the cloth on the wrong side looks wonderfully fresh and bright. You rip the seams, you clean and press with careful hands; you turn the whole garment inside out, put on a little new trimming, and you are delighted with the result. How nice it looks. With what satisfaction you see her wear it. She, if she be the right kind of girl, is proud of the dear mother's skillful handiwork, and her father lets fall some quiet word of appreciation. All this you would have missed had there been a little more money in your purse.

Thus, in the matter of household expenses, the woman who never needs to count the cost of the meals ordered for her family, misses the substantial satisfaction which one enjoys who has learned to make the most of small materials. Compensation again.

Every housekeeper desires for herself ways of making an appetizing meal at little cost—that is, if she really desires to do her best in the kitchen as well as in the parlor. Cannot we of the Home-Circle help each other by an interchange of these small secrets? There is surely no reason why we should be ashamed of them, and as variety is the spice of life (especially in the matter of cookery), we may find pleasure as well as profit in the lessons so learned from one another. To set the ball rolling, I will give the menu (excuse the word) of two dinners lately pronounced very good by a household not a hundred miles away:

For the first the cook was, in a measure, indebted to a former correspondent of the Press, who now, alas, writes no more. Following the directions she had given, a quantity of white beans was put on early in the day to boil for soup, without the common addition of a piece of pork, there being an objection in the family to the excess of grease, so absorbed. An onion and a stalk of celery were added. When the beans were perfectly soft they were mashed through a colander, and milk added to make the soup of the desired consistency. All this had been done many times before, but the new idea which came as a happy suggestion was this: There happened to be some pieces of codfish left from the dinner of the previous day. They were picked into fine shreds, soaked for a little while in hot water to soften them, then added to the soup, and all boiled up again together with a small piece of butter, pepper and salt. Now don't say "I know it must have been horrid!" Just try it. Call it fish chowder if you choose, and be sure to have an abundance of bread cut into small squares and fried crisp and brown in some good butter to serve up with it. I don't think your household will have much appetite left for the rest of the dinner.

Another day there remained in the meat-safe a very small piece of cold beef, and in a porcelain pan the water in which it had been boiled the day before. There was not enough of the latter for soup, but it was strong and good. So it was still further reduced by boiling, seasoned, thickened a little with flour, and the beef cut in small pieces and added to it, making a stew with a quantity of nice gravy. Then a larger dish of noodles was prepared, and of all things which make much out of little—I had almost said something out of nothing—I know of none to equal noodles. If you have never seen them and have a German friend, ask her to give you a lesson in making them. If you are not so fortunate, try to do it in this way: For a family of six persons take three eggs and a tablespoonful of milk, work into them as much flour as you can, until you have a ball of stiff, yellow dough. Divide it in pieces and roll out each separately till it is as thin as a sheet of paper. It must not be in the least sticky or soft. Allow these sheets to dry a little; then take one at a time, roll it up lightly, and with a sharp knife begin at one end and cut it into little fine shreds. When all are done spread them out on your biscuit-board and leave them for two or three hours or even longer. At dinner time have ready a large pot of boiling water slightly salted; drop the noodles in lightly, and with a spoon lift them from the bottom of the pot. If properly made they will all separate in the boiling water. In three or four minutes they will be done. Drain them and heap on a hot dish. If a few of the noodles have been left out and fried brown in a little butter they add to the appearance and the enjoyment of the dish scattered over the top when it is ready for the table. Served with any kind of stewed meat this makes an excellent dinner, and is a relief from the dull routine of fried meat and boiled potatoes into which country housekeepers of narrow means are apt to fall.

Farmers' Sons.

The grandest product of the farm is the boys and girls. In every avenue of life where thrift, capacity and energy are required, the man who pushes to the front is the son of a farmer. He has the intelligence. There is a sort of broad common sense running through his acts. He has a constitution that can endure labors. It is a notable fact that in the colleges of our country the best students are the boys from the farm. In the workshop, in the halls of legislation, at the bar, in the pulpit, ninety-nine hundredths of men who stand upon the summit, were once boys on the farm. They went barefooted, wore patched clothes and worked for their bread. Almost one-half of the people in this country reside in town. Where are the town boys in the race of life? Fooling, curling their hair, polishing their boots, while the rough country boy is plunging barefooted along the road to fame. With a book under one arm, and a few extra clothes in hand, he passes the elegant home of the town boy, and he looks in on ease and luxury almost for the first time. He may be called a tramp, and be refused a crust of bread; one day he will return and buy that mortgage-covered house. Where did that boy get his noble purpose and his unflinching courage? They were born to him on the farm, they were woven into his fibre by early years of toil; the warp and wool of his life were threads of gold.—Iowa Homestead.

CONTENTS OF FRESH FALLEN SNOW. The Popular Science News says that a Swiss scientist named Floegel, found in the freshly fallen snow living infusoria and algae, bacilli (micrococci, mites, diatoms, spores of fungi (in immense numbers), also fibers of wood, mouse hairs, pieces of butterfly wings, skin of the larvae of insects, cotton fibers, pieces of grass, epidermi, pollen grains, rye and potato flour, grains of quartz, minute pieces of roofing tiles, with bits of iron and coal. Poets must hunt up some other emblem of purity.

The Government of Children.

[Written by MRS. RASCHER.]

Pray do not say, when you read my heading, "that wornout question!" There are songs that never grow old. There are themes that are never threadbare. See the demand there is in our literature for love stories. Do you suppose they are only read by hapless youths and love-lorn maidens? Why, bless you, no. It is the gray-beards, and grandmas and great aunts who devour them. You young folks need not be surprised if you catch a few tears coursing over furrowed cheeks because the "course of true love" is so rough and uncertain. The judge will whistle at times his "old love tune," and the lawyers smile only because conscious of some tender memory in their own breast. So is this question of family government beyond our pens to wear out.

There is use in talking over and over again subjects of vital importance to us all. Sister Sue, in two very interesting letters, brought this subject before us, and it has been in my thoughts since. Within the past week I have again been reminded of it by the perusal of a little book by John S. C. Abbott, "The Mother at Home." I wish every mother might read it.

All agree that as children's dispositions differ, so must government differ. Is this not equally true of parents?

One who is by nature or grace uniformly gentle and self-composed may punish a child, even by whipping, whenever they think it necessary. Another, who is quick-tempered, must make it a point to wait till all feeling of anger is gone, lest they wrong their little ones far more than the correction benefits them. Little eyes are very sharp. They see the faintest trace of temper. Little ears are most acute. They catch the ring of anger in your voice. Little minds are quick and discerning. They know how inconsistent it is for you to punish them, while you are yourself disobeying God.

I have heard a parent say, "Do as I say, not as I do." Now, all parents, perhaps, do not so honestly confess their short-comings, yet probably three-fourths of the mismanagement of children comes from our wrong example and inconsistency. I think it is that droll philosopher, Josh Billings, who says that "a good way to train up a child in the way he should go is to travel it yourself occasionally." What right have we to require more self-control from children than from ourselves?

Of late years much has been said and written on corporal punishment, as if on this one thing hinged all good government. Whereas it is not so much the kind of punishment as the spirit in which it is administered that makes it right or wrong. To my mind, it is more liable to abuse than many others. It is so easy for one who is quick tempered to slap without discrimination, and for one who is high tempered to go beyond reason in severity.

But there is a punishment more common than any other, which I believe to be always wrong and harmful to both parent and child. I refer to scolding. Reproof administered in kindness, and, if possible, away from others, is quite another matter; but from scolding (tongue lashing, I once heard a lady call it), what can you expect but a corresponding irritability on the part of the child?

If you want to note the effect of scolding, wait till the little ones are playing "mamma" some day. Your little daughter is mother to the rest. Hear her shrill tones (for you seldom scold in gentle voice). I think you will hear your own forms of expression. I have been a listener at that school, and know how it sounds.

But if we set aside these two most common modes of punishment—whipping and scolding—let us not fail to substitute something in their places. One way is to have the penalty connected with the offense. For example, if a child marks the paint with a pencil, wring out a cloth in soapy water and make them rub the marks with it until they are effaced. If they whittle where they should not, deprive them of their knife for a time. If they get in the habit of whining, grant no request made in that tone.

Mr. Abbott, in the book above referred to, while insisting on the necessity of prompt obedience at all times, still cautions parents to make allowance for the moods of their children. He says: "Almost every individual is conscious of seasons when he seems to be afflicted with a kind of morbid sensitiveness. Our spirits often rise and fall with bodily health; and he has gained a great victory over his body, and a great triumph of mind, who can invariably preserve the same calm and cheerful spirit, undisturbed by harassing cares or the irritation of a diseased frame. * * * When we see some of the wisest and best of men oppressed with these infirmities, we must learn forbearance and sympathy with children. At such times a judicious mother, knowing that the irritability is as much a bodily as a mental infirmity, will do all in her power to calm and soothe. She will avoid everything calculated to jar the feelings, and will endeavor, by mild amusements or repose, to lull their feelings asleep. By this method she will save the child much unhappiness, and will promote an amiable and sweet disposition. Probably many children have had their feelings permanently soured by utter disregard of these variations of mind. * * * The obvious general policy is, when a child is in this excited state, to remove him as much as possible from the power of temptation; and if he commits a fault which it is necessary to notice, let the punishment be of such a kind as is calculated to soothe him."

Now in regard to these moods, there can generally be used the proverbial ounce of prevention. Probably one-half the fretfulness of children is caused by a disordered stomach. It may smooth matters for the moment to meet every ailment with a cookie, a doughnut, or a piece of pie; but if you would avoid fractions, peevish, sickly children, if you desire to be free from disturbed sleep and doctors' visits, insist on regular meals and light suppers. You have no right to meet every need by stuffing a child, and then whip it for being cross. A friend told me once that her mother never forbade playing on the Sabbath, but prevented the necessity of doing so by attending church and Sunday school in the morning, and devoting the entire afternoon to Bible stories and pictures, and a quiet walk, preferring to reserve her own reading until evening than to have a distracted mind, or to allow her little ones to engage in noisy plays. But if they do get into a romp, don't talk as if they were of sinners the chief. It is not half as bad as for you to scold about it.

One of the surest preventives for mischief and misrule is to provide plenty of work and play. It may be a trouble to do this, but it is not so troublesome as to right the wrongs that befall children who are left entirely to their own devices. Some parents do not exact any work, or even obedience, from their children, because "the poor things will find so many rough places when they are grown up." So they make the rough places harder and the rainy days more stormy, by withholding the discipline and knowledge so essential in afterlife. The world will give them its rough training; common sense may lead them to correct many errors, but the Good Book tells us that "it is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth," and the Good Book is generally right, if it is old-fashioned.

When the days are bright and sunny amusing little children is an easy task, at least for dwellers in the country. But when the days are stormy how hard we find it to meet the constant demand of these active little minds.

We find that a can of stiff adobe, a hammer and a bit of board on which to form their mud into bricks, to be a great source of enjoyment, while a box of sand furnishes an endless variety of plays.

A little flour paste (with cloves added to keep it sweet), a picture paper, and an old book is another great help. It is of no use to say that you have not time to be bothered in this way; it is better to take care than to have care take you.

All of these amusements for the little ones are open, I suppose, but to one objection, that they make dirt. But there are others which are not wrong of themselves, but which may be wrongly indulged in, such as dancing, card-playing, etc., and I am often at a loss to know whether it is better to eschew them entirely or forbid only the abuse.

Perhaps the members of the Home Circle will tell us what they think, and why?

SOMETHING ABOUT FOG.—The vapor in the atmosphere is nearly or quite transparent, but when, from any cause, the air becomes cooled below the dew point, a portion of its vapor is precipitated in the form of drops of water extremely minute, which affects the transparency of the air and forms fog or cloud, according as it occurs near the surface of the earth or in the upper regions of the atmosphere. When steam rises from a vessel of warm water and mingles with a cold atmosphere, a portion of the vapor is condensed and a mist is formed. This mist is sometimes, but improperly, called vapor. Vapor of water is a gaseous body, while mist is a liquid body. A similar condensation often takes place in nature upon a large scale, and the mist is then called fog. Fogs are most prevalent near the banks of Newfoundland. These fogs occur in every month of the year, but they are most frequent in summer, when the banks are enveloped in fog nearly half the time. The vapor which causes these fogs is furnished by the warm air of the Gulf Stream, which is condensed by the cold air of the banks, the contrast of temperature being here more sudden than is found in any other part of the Atlantic ocean. During July the water on the banks frequently has a temperature of 45 degrees, while within a distance of less than 300 miles the Gulf Stream has a temperature of 78 degrees. The contrast in temperature is almost equally great in January, but fogs are less frequent in winter, because at that period the air is more agitated by storms, which tend to equalize the temperature over different parts of the ocean.

WHY THE TOES WEAR OFF. A man who has a "canting-to-the-right-and-left sort of walk," during the contact of the foot with the ground, gives it a twist or grinding motion, the obvious result of which would be to wear off his boots rapidly at the parts where the most pressure is exerted. We have seen people who, in walking, give the body a quick, nervous thrust forward just about the time the foot is raised, while the toe rests upon the ground. This peculiarity tends to wear off the leather at the toe rapidly. Many people strike the point of the heel first in walking, and soon run it down through the hard leather lifts.

Our Famous Women.

What Carlyle said about biography, "It is the most universally pleasant, universally profitable, of all reading," was never truer than today. The world hungers for the real, and because it cannot obtain this takes the unreal, as in novels. Trollope's autobiography will be an inspiration to thousands. Trevelyan's Macaulay will last as long as the brilliant essays of the dead author. Many a life has been changed by a book, especially a useful biography. The son of a drunkard, reading the life of an English philanthropist, was incited to become a noble man, adopted his name, Henry Wilson, and went from a shoemaker's bench to the Vice Presidency of this grand republic. The more of such books the better for us. A. D. Worthington, of Hartford, Conn., believing this, has just brought out a book, "Our Famous Women," which will be eagerly read, not only by all who are proud of woman's success, but by those who are anxious to see how success is won. Thirty women like Julia Ward Howe, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Maria Mitchell and Lucretia Mott are chosen, and twenty bright women like Rose Terry Cooke, A. D. T. Whitney and Louisa Chandler Moulton have written of them. The book is fresh, strong and intensely interesting. We follow Louisa M. Alcott through her early struggles in Boston in earning her living "by teaching, sewing, writing, anything that came to hand," helping in our civil war, and at 36 publishing her first successful book, "Little Women," followed by "Little Men," for which 50,000 advance copies were ordered. Writing fourteen hours out of the twenty-four when she is making a book, often using an old atlas for a desk, her work has paid her in the love of the whole people, and $100,000 besides. Mrs. Stanton writes about brave Susan B. Anthony, to whom, sometime, when all the warfare and struggle is over, we shall build a monument, and wonder that even the Christian press could have been so harsh and unjust. Lucy Larcom, one of our sweetest and most natural poets, whose own life in the Lowell mills reads like a romance, pictures heroic Clara Barton, whose record in our civil war and in the Franco-Prussian makes her an example to every young woman in our country. Fashion and frivolity fade away in disgrace before such an inspiring life.

Gentle, refined Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, going among the poor people at Gloucester by the ocean or in Andover, thinking outside of cold theology into the "sweetness and light" of "Gates Ajar," which she was two years in writing, or "Avis," a book harshly criticised, but of unusual strength and power, or modestly lecturing before Boston University on "Representative Modern Fiction;" how eagerly we read about one as shy as George Eliot, and like her, writing with a purpose, because of the needs of humanity. For how short a time will some of the novels of the present day last, because they are simply artistic, with no moral purpose.

In her own rich style Miss Phelps tells the history of gifted Mary A. Livermore. The following touching story shows the woman: After a recent lecture in Albion, Mich., a white-haired lady came to the platform and asked Mrs. Livermore if she remembered writing a letter for John —, one of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, dying in Memphis, to his wife, and completing it after his death?

"I think," said the woman, "my daughter-in-law and I would have died when we heard that John was dead but for that letter. It comforted us both, and by-and-by when we heard of other women similarly afflicted we sent them the letter to read, till it was torn into pieces. Then we sewed the pieces together and made copies of the letter, which we sent to those of our acquaintances whom the war bereft."

"But Annie, my son's wife, never got over John's death. She kept about and worked and went to church, but the life had gone out of her. Eight years ago she died. One day, a little while before she died, she said, 'Mother, if you ever find Mrs. Livermore or hear of her, I wish you would give her my wedding ring, which has never been off my finger since John put it there, and will not come off till I am dead. Ask her to wear it for John's sake and mine, and tell her this was my dying request.'"

"I live eight miles from here," added the woman, "and when I read in the paper that you were to lecture here to-night I decided to drive over, and, if you will accept it, to give you Annie's ring."

Miss Phelps well says of Mrs. Livermore:

"As strong as the hills, and as sweet as the sun, she has stood serenely in the front of every movement against oppression, vice and ignorance."

Lillian Whiting, one of the ablest and noblest among women journalists, at the same time one of the youngest, holding a valued position on the editorial staff of the Boston Traveler, has sketched brilliant Mary Clemmer and Charlotte Cushman.

Kate Sanborn, bright, witty, and always entertaining, has written anew the touching history of Margaret Fuller, drowned with her husband and child off Fire Island beach, Long Island; of noble Francis Willard and "Marian Harland," whose books are read the country over.

The paper of Mary Mapes Dodge, the editor of St. Nicholas, by Lucia Gilbert Runkle, herself an able writer for some years on the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, a position held by few women save Margaret Fuller, and that on Mary L. Booth, editor of Harper's Bazar, by Harriet Prescott Stafford, the brilliant author of ten books, are of especial interest. Mrs. Dodge's "Hans Brinker" has been translated into French, German, Russian and Italian. In Amsterdam it was recommended to her by an enterprising bookseller as his most attractive juvenile! While making St. Nicholas a delight to everybody she has written four books besides her editorial work, having the rare genius of crowding much into little time without ever seeming in haste.

Miss Booth has been a translator of many valuable books from the French and German. Count de Gasparin's "Uprising of a Great People," translated by her in our civil war, "was," said Charles Sumner, "worth a whole ## Pie-Plant an Unwholesome Food.

It has long been known that pie-plant, or rhubarb, contains in its stalks and roots, particularly in the former, a considerable amount of oxalic acid. According to a recent analysis made by B. W. Damon, Ph. C., as reported in the Physician and Surgeon, the fresh stalks of rhubarb contain 0.19, or nearly one-fifth per cent of free and combined oxalic acid.

A year or two ago we undertook some experiments at the Sanitarium for the purpose of determining the effect of this vegetable upon the system when used as food. As the article was used upon the tables of the Sanitarium two or three times a week, we first directed that it should not be used for a week, then made careful examination of the urine of some thirty patients. Crystals of oxalate of lime, the form in which the acid is usually found when present in the urine, were found in a few specimens only. We then allowed the use of rhubarb in the form of sauce for one meal, and made another examination of the urine of those cases in which the oxalate had not been observed in the previous examination. Oxalate of lime crystals were found in abundance in almost every case.

This experiment proves that the oxalate acid found in pie-plant is a substance which cannot be used as food, and must be eliminated. It is also well known that calculi are sometimes formed from oxalate of lime crystals in the bladder, and that the presence of this abnormal element in the urine is often associated with grave disorders of the general system. These facts

The Norman Horse At Home.

The popularity which the Norman horse and his grades have attained in this State justifies us in presenting to our readers statements and engravings of the animals as they may be seen in their home. A few weeks ago a correspondent gave an interesting sketch of this character, and now we have engravings reproduced from the paintings of European artists, in which these horses constitute the prominent figures, one of which appears on this page. It is a noonday sketch in Normandy, and represents a trio of the faithful steeds released from their wains, enjoying the midday meal.

For many hundred years there has existed in Normandy a superior race of heavy horses, noted for their size, action, strength and endurance. They were called Norman horses from the fact that they were bred in Normandy, and existed there, a distinct breed, for many years before they became scattered throughout the other districts in France. They are now known by various names peculiar to the departments in which they are found. In Boulogne they are known as Boulonnais; in Normandy as Augerons; in Picardy as Vimieux, and in Artois and French Flanders as Hammonds. They are all descendants of the Norman race, to which they are indebted for all their good qualities as draft horses. There are various other names by which Norman horses are known in France, but the families we have named are the most renowned in commerce.

French draft horses are generally known throughout the world as Norman horses. It is the name that was given to the renowned heavy horses in Normandy many centuries ago, and has been handed down from generation to generation until the present time. J. H. Walsh, a reliable English author, says: "The Norman horse has been celebrated for ages as the type of horse for the purpose of show and utility combined; with a fine, upstanding forehead, he unites a frame of the most massive proportions, and this is molded in a form as elegant as is consistent with his enormous power."

Their countrywoman, Rosa Bonheur, has made this variety of horses familiar to most of my readers, and I need not, therefore, trouble myself to describe them minutely. * * * The true Norman horse is large, powerful, sufficiently active and very hardy." The same writer says: "We [meaning the English people] may hope still to be able to maintain our supremacy in horses intended for the race-course or hunting-field; but, as far as I can learn, the French cavalry are gradually obtaining a class of animals bred out of phalanx in the cause of human freedom." Her "History of New York" has had a very large sale, several copies of it having been illustrated, one given her by an eminent biblioplist containing 2,000 pictures, and another in Chicago having been enlarged to twenty-two volumes. Her home is one of the most delightful places in New York.

America is rightly proud of its noble women. We go back with eagerness to old Greek days; let us read the lives of those who still live among us and be stimulated by them.—Sarah K. Bolton in Inter-Ocean.

MACHINERY PROGRESSIVE.—Some manufacturers, says the Mechanical World, in fact probably the majority of them, when once they have put down machinery for a given class of operations, consider that they have done everything that is needed, never dreaming that tools and machinery can be, and are constantly being, improved. They are horrified if they are told that it would pay them to pull out a given machine; they appear to have a pride never to have a new machine. The various machines work away from year to year—the smiths' forges, the shafting which was put down at the starting of the works—there they remain, doing good work, perhaps, but not the best work, not the quickest and cheapest work, and therefore the works become old-fashioned; the workmen fall into ruts and become old-fashioned as well as the machinery. A machine should never be allowed to become worn out; it should be replaced by an improved one long before that period arrives.

COAL TWO THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—Theophrastus, a Greek writer who flourished in the fourth century before the Christian era, in a work entitled "Book on Stones," describes an earthy substance which would kindle and burn, and which was used by smiths. There can be no doubt that he refers to coal, and that this is the earliest passage in which that substance is expressed or mentioned.

seem to us to be sufficient to condemn the use of the article as food. During the coming season we shall make still further investigations of this subject, and at some future time report the result.

GLASS, POTTERY AND PORCELAIN EXHIBITION. We have received from Mrs. Benjamin Rowland, St. George Hotel, Philadelphia, a circular stating that the Associate Committee of Women of the Trustees of the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art propose to open on the 14th of April, in the city of Philadelphia, and continue for one month, an exhibition of porcelain, glass and pottery of American manufacture. The committee respectfully request co-operation in this work, and ask you to send to them not only specimens of porcelain, glass and pottery as it is now made in this State, but also, if possible, specimens of work before the year 1876, that the great improvement that has been made in this manufacture since then may be clearly understood and appreciated by every visitor to the exhibition. Specimens of decoration on porcelain, by Americans, will also be received. The committee will pay all expenses for freight to and from Philadelphia, and will also, if desired, sell upon commission, any articles consigned to them. Mrs. Rowland is entrusted with obtaining such articles from California and Nevada, and anyone having anything they desire to exhibit, may correspond with her at the address given above.

PRICES OF HORNS FOR CUTLERY.—Reindeer horns are brought from Lapland and Siberia to England for use by cutlers in large quantities. The largest stag horns come from the East Indies and China. Many specimens of the antlers are so noble and beautiful that it causes a pang to see them given to the saw of the cutter, the more so because they are becoming annually more scarce. The best are now selling for $600 per ton. Time was when they could be bought for $50 to $100.

their lightest and stoutest Norman mares, crossed with thoroughbred horses of pure English blood, some imported direct and others bred with great care in France. The produce are of good size, very hardy, and possessed of excellent legs and feet; indeed, in every way calculated for troop horses; and should our cavalry ever come in contact with them, and any advantage is to be gained, it must be through superior horsemanship alone."

Youatt, a reliable English writer, says: "The best French horses are bred in Normandy and Limousin. * * * The Norman horses are now much crossed by our hunters, and occasionally by the thoroughbred and English roadster; and light draft horses have not suffered by a mixture with the Norman." The same author says: "The Norman carriers travel with a team of four horses, and from fourteen to twenty-two miles in a day, with a load of ninety hundred weight."

Prof. Sanson, of the Agricultural School of Grignon, in France, speaking of these horses, says: "They have a vigorous constitution, and in point of strength, they are a Hercules among horses. They are as gentle as they are strong—are renowned for their docility, and, for so heavy animals, are free and quick in their movements; they are endowed with a vigor and energy which is reflected in their resolute but gentle glance."

SIXTEEN LEADING INVENTIONS.—The following are said to be the sixteen American inventions of world wide adoption: The cotton gin, the planing machine, the grass mower and reaper, the rotary printing press, steam navigation, the hot-air machine, the sewing machine, the india-rubber industry, the machine manufacture of horse-shoes, the sand blast for graving, the gauge lathe, the grain elevator, artificial ice making on a large scale, the electro-magnet in its practical application and the telephone.

Work for the Grand Lodge.

We understand that the Grand Recorder will submit several recommendations to the Grand Lodge at the session about to convene, which should receive respectful and careful consideration. The reinstatement law passed at the last session of the Supreme Lodge has proven in practice just what we foresaw it would, for the simple reason that the law falls far short of meeting the ends for which it was made. It is not sufficiently comprehensive nor sufficiently explicit. Every few days the Grand Recorder is asked how much is to be collected from a person standing suspended from the Order who wishes to be reinstated. These questions are not confined to new and inexperienced officers, but from those old in the harness as frequently as any other, for few agree as to the meaning of the law, or the latitude that we can in propriety take thereunder. We do most earnestly hope that our representatives to the Supreme Lodge will use their best endeavors to have this law remodeled so as to make it what it should be—a plain guide to go by in so important a matter as the reinstatement of persons who

FRATERNITY.

[By WILLIAM H. BARNES, San Francisco.]

What bright form is this that appears to the view
Of the mighty assemblies of earth,
Which with accents of kindness, and deeds good and true,
Shows to mankind its duty and worth?
What name does it bear? this angel-like form
That sheddeth such glory around;
Whose eyes beam with love, and whose actions all prove
That the jewels of God it hath found?

As it waves its bright wings, see the outgushing springs
Of Charity flow o'er the world;
It raises its hands, and by legions of bands
The standards of Aid are unfurled;
A glance of its eye, and kind messengers fly
To palace, or cottage, or home;
And to help the distressed, the bravest and best,
In response to its sign, hither come.

The hungry are fed, and the weary are led
By the love that its presence ensures;
The heart is made light, as drear Poverty's blight
Is driven away from the door.
Hands link firm and true, pledged duty to do,
As men gaze on this beauteous form,
And bulwarks arise from the earth to the skies
To shield the defenceless from storm.

O'er the graves of the dead a halo is shed,
Emblematic of peace and of rest;
'Round those left behind is a cordon entwined
Of sympathy, heartfelt and blest,
That gilds with its rays even darkest of days
And dispels the black clouds from the sky;
That wipes off the tear of the suffering here
And commands Destitution to fly.

Do you ask for the name of this Genius, whose fame
Through the civilized world doth abound?
'Tis FRATERNITY, pure, whose works will endure
Until the last trumpet shall sound
That "Time is no more," and Eternity's door
Is opened forever and aye;
But until that great day, and this earth wastes away,
Fraternity never can die.

To Grand Lodge Delegates.

In regard to the near approaching session of the Grand Lodge and the legislative matters pertaining thereto, the WATCHMAN desires to indulge in a little general counsel to delegates, with the hopes that some of the following thoughts may take lodgement in their minds, and result in a course of action suited to the best interests of the Order.

More rests upon the action or non-action of members of this Grand Lodge than the casual observer would suppose, not alone from matters of special interest that may arise, but also from the fact that the A. O. U. W. is the first and oldest Order of those conducted on the insurance plan, and whatever course of action is pursued is sure to be noted by kindred Orders and be far and wide-reaching in its results either for good or evil.

Therefore, take a high stand. Remember that the humblest member has a usefulness and a work to do that may redound to his own credit and the benefit of future generations. Let all selfishness and bias give way before that which may become apparent to be for the best and most permanent welfare of the Order. We have been very fortunate heretofore, on the whole, in the election of good officers and the securing of good management. See that this is kept up, and let us profit by past experience. Go slowly in introducing new features or adopting changes; let them come gradually and only as time shows that they are really necessary and that their importance demands recognition, but in the meantime let well enough alone. We are come together to some extent to compare notes and reason with each other. To this end we are more in need of workers than theorists—men who are not only able but willing, and who are ready to help in consummating that which on investigation seems really best for the Order at large, whether their pet schemes suffer or not.

Supreme Lodge Representatives.

Last year our Grand Lodge elected its full quota of Representatives to the Supreme Lodge, but only one found it convenient to attend the session. We trust it will not be so this year. We suppose we shall have eight Past Grand Masters to choose from at the time of election, and from that number we ought to be able to command three who can be depended upon to represent us. Our jurisdiction is second only to one in point of strength, and we believe second to none in the high quality of its membership, and we not only owe it to ourselves but to the rest of the Order that our best efforts should be put forth in the highest legislative body of the Order for its general good. Some work needs to be done in the way of perfecting our general laws. Something of this is referred to elsewhere. We need a new ritual when one can be produced that shall be so superior to our present one that no one can reasonably object to a change, but a new ritual that would be little or no improvement should not be thought of for a moment. A ritual, like a good poem, should be a work of inspiration—something that would not grow old with age, to use a paradoxical expression. Our burial service needs a little revision, though on the whole it is now very good. Then we have no established service for the dedication of halls or the laying of corner-stones. These we need. The Degree of Honor should receive some attention. Following in our wake, Kansas and Illinois have been legislating in regard thereto, Kansas having adopted substantially the same constitution as ours. If these Lodges succeed, it will be just as important that they be governed by a system of ceremonies and laws of general application as any others, and the sooner such laws and regulations are made by the Supreme Lodge the less of complication and difficulty there will exist in the future.

Aside from these matters which are of great importance, there are others that will probably command the first attention of the Supreme Lodge. The business of spreading the Order into new territory is about finished, so far as the Supreme Lodge is concerned. The ground is nearly all covered by Grand Lodges. The time must soon come when no more Grand Lodges can be set apart as separate jurisdictions under our laws as they now exist, as it would leave the Supreme Jurisdiction with less than 3,000 members. When such event occurs, there will be need of some different provision in our laws. It would be manifestly unwise to hold these fragments in such a condition. All inducement for increase of members on their part would cease, and they would retrograde instead of advancing. Retrogression means relief assessments. The best road out of this difficulty seems a little difficult to select, but some way must soon be chosen, and the sooner we prepare for the inevitable the better.

The situation in Iowa probably will not necessitate any additional action on the part of the Supreme Lodge. We presume it may be regarded as substantially settled. But the matters before-mentioned show that subjects of importance will need to be considered and acted upon, and our representation should be full.

To Subscribers.

The brethren who take the WATCHMAN and those who are willing to subscribe and thus support its enterprise for the good of the Order, will find it a convenient opportunity to send in their subscriptions by the representative attending the Grand Lodge opening in S. F., Tuesday, April 1st. A. T. Dewey, P. M. W., of this office, will attend each session of the Grand Lodge, and be pleased to receipt for any payments they prefer to make without the trouble of visiting our office.

WE publish on this page the third on the list of prize poems, which speaks for itself in ringing tones.

Previous Grand Lodges.

During this, the seventh annual session of our Grand Lodge, now represented by considerably over two hundred Subordinate Lodges and sixteen thousand individual members, it may not be unprofitable to glance back over the path we have traveled and review in outline our trials and triumphs on the sometimes rough and thorny, but always upward road. If at times it has been steep, we have been consoled by the thought that the steeper the road the more rapid has been the rise, and the more certain and inspiring has been the expanding of our horizon. And while not yet at the summit, we are ourselves astonished at the rapid and enduring progress we have made, and hold our prosperous past as an augury of a still more prosperous future.

Six years ago from the 10th day of last November, 1883, 30 Workmen, representing 10 Lodges (the first 10 on our present list), with a constituency of 325 members, met in Kohler's hall, West Oakland. This comprised all that was known of Workmanship west of the Missouri river. Linked by what was then an unfortunate similarity of names with the political party of Workingmen, they had more to contend against than was even rightfully their share—and many thought that even that was too much. Popular apathy and prejudice had to be overcome, the misrepresentations of parties interested as business rivals had to be explained away, and numberless other difficulties, seen and unseen, seemed to hedge our way. If ever men deserved unlimited credit, it was those few who, recognizing that they had the means of supplying a great and popular want, pushed the Order forward rapidly from obscurity till it struck its present high road to success. It has not yet lost the momentum imparted to it by those willing workers. The Grand Lodge was organized with our present Supreme Master Workman, Dr. M. W. Fish, as Past Grand Master Workman; Wm. H. Jordan, as Grand Master Workman; Horace G. Pratt as Grand Recorder; C. H. Haile, Grand Receiver; J. A. Calhoun, Grand Foreman; Truman H. Allen, Grand Overseer; Martin H. Smith, Grand Guide; H. G. Oliver, Grand Watchman.

The second session of the Grand Lodge was a special one, held at the Cosmopolitan Hotel in this city, July 16, 1878. The principal feature of this session was the jubilant feeling occasioned by California's reaching the 2,000 mark in membership as represented in 39 Lodges and being set apart as a separate beneficiary jurisdiction. The same Grand officers were continued in office, and all set their faces forward with renewed hope and zeal.

The second regular annual session of the Grand Lodge was held at San Jose, Jan. 21, 1879, at which time the number of Lodges had increased to 68, with a membership of over 4,500, not counting the two first Degree of Honor Lodges. The principal Grand Officers were continued in their positions with the following exceptions: M. T. Brewer became Grand Foreman; Geo. Fetherston, Grand Overseer; Clay W. Taylor, Grand Guide, and E. De Lano, Grand Watchman.

The third annual session of the Grand Lodge was held at Sacramento, Feb. 3, 1880. At that time the list of Lodges had increased to 159, with a membership of over 9,000. At that time Grand Foreman Brewer was passed through the chairs taking the honors of P. G. M. W. before the close of the Lodge. The other officers elected were Clay W. Taylor, of Shasta, as Grand Master; W. H. Barnes, of San Francisco as Grand Foreman; E. De Lano, of Stockton, Grand Overseer; the same Grand Recorder and Receiver, re-elected; I. A. Dunsmoor, of Los Angeles, Grand Guide, and W. Wiltse of Placerville as Grand Watchman.

The fourth annual session of the Grand Lodge was held in San Francisco, February 1, 1881. At that time the Lodges numbered 191, with a membership of over 10,500. At that session Wm. H. Barnes was elected Grand Master; Frank G. Beatty of Grass Valley, Grand Foreman; J. T. Rogers of Ukiah, Grand Overseer; Eugene Gregory of Sacramento, as Grand Guide; and the same Grand Recorder, Receiver and Watchman as previously.

The fifth annual Session of the Grand Lodge was held in this city, April 4th, 1882. At that time the Lodges numbered up to 213, not including the D. of H. Lodges. The membership had increased to nearly 15,000. In the election of officers several of the old officers retained their positions. The ones elected to new positions were J. T. Rogers, as Grand Foreman; David McClure, Grand Overseer, and Harry J. Lask, as Grand Guide.

The sixth annual session of the Grand Lodge was held in this city, April 3, 1883. It found a net gain for the year of 1,489 members, nine new subordinates and fourteen new Degree of Honor Lodges. The increase for these two years was largely due to the vigorous efforts of the Grand Master Workman, W. H. Barnes. At that session the present Grand Officers were elected, and have since conducted affairs to the successful issue where we now find ourselves.

A GREAT EVENT IN PROSPECT.—The WATCHMAN has received a finely lithographed card on which are printed these words: "The pleasure of your company is requested at the sixth anniversary celebration of Valley Lodge, No. 30, Ancient Order United Workman, Wednesday evening, April 2d, at the Mechanics' Pavilion." This reunion and anniversary celebration will be strictly an invitation party from a Lodge of Workmen now numbering over 1,000 members and to which the Grand Lodge then in session will be invited as a body. There will be no charge for admission and the ladies' hat room will be free. It is confidently expected that there will be over 5,000 present at this reception. Tickets for admission can be procured from the following Committee of Arrangements: Daniel McLeod, P. M. W., Chairman; Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. W.; Wm. B. Lyon, P. M. W.; E. F. Loud, P. M. W.; Wm. Broderick, P. M. W.; W. G. Buchanan, P. M. W.; T. H. Macdonald, P. M. W.; Wm. Patterson, P. M. W.; Chris. Waller, P. M. W.; Jas. M. Camp, P. M. W.; Jos. Giusti, Superintendent of Culinary Department and Secretary. A Reception Committee of 15 and a Floor Committee of 24 have been selected with a view especially as to their fitness for this duty. Chas. F. Seaburg as caterer and Brother Jos. Giusti as generalissimo will have charge of the culinary department. The well-known reputation that Valley has achieved heretofore in entertaining the Grand Lodge makes the success of this reception a foregone conclusion.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.—The WATCHMAN acknowledges the receipt of cards indicating the marriage of Mr. William S. Watson, son of our efficient Deputy Grand Recorder, J. W. Watson, and Miss Allie E. Strong of Clayton, Contra Costa County. This interesting and happy event occurred at the residence of the bride's parents last Thursday, Rev. Mr. Strong, father of the bride officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Watson will, on their tour, visit Sacramento, San Jose and Monterey, at the conclusion of which they will be glad to see their friends at their residence, No. 586 Tenth street, Oakland. For several years Mr. Watson has been head book-keeper and cashier for Smith & Snow, of the fire insurance business, this city. Recently he has associated himself in a similar business in Oakland with his brother-in-law, under the firm name of Strong & Watson. Mr. and Mrs. Watson have our best wishes for a long and happy career of married life.

ALL the Lodges in the city are gaining steadily in membership.

A Gratifying Result.

Early in this year it was deemed expedient by the Grand Master Workman to have the books of the Grand Recorder and Grand Receiver expeted for the period covered by the past three years in order that the business of those offices might be laid open in detail before the next Grand Lodge, and that its members and the membership in general might see in what manner the business had been conducted. The result is most favorable and gratifying, and reflects great credit on the business ability and integrity of all parties concerned. The WATCHMAN heartily indorses the commendations given by Brother Blumenthal, the expert, in the following introduction to his report:

To the Grand Master Workman and Members of the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., State of California—BROTHERS: In presenting to you my report on the books of the Grand Recorder and Grand Receiver of the A. O. U. W., from February, 1880, to this day, I beg leave to state that upon careful examination I have found the same correct in every particular, that the books are kept in a thorough, business-like manner, and they reflect creditably on our Grand Recorder, Brother Pratt, his able assistant, Brother Watson, and Grand Receiver, Brother Haile. Yours in C. H. and P., JULIUS BLUMENTHAL. San Francisco, March 1, 1884.

Following are some of the totals, which will be of interest as showing the large amount of money handled and business done. In the Beneficiary Fund from Feb. 1 to December, 1880, including balances, the total receipts and disbursements in the Grand Receiver's account were $147,267; for the year 1881, $178,770; for 1882, $274,825; for 1883, $272,423; from January to March, 1884, $61,952; total, $935,237. In the General Fund for the same dates, the totals were respectively $15,214.50; $17,130.78; $16,288.39; $15,610.61, and $7,378.33; total, $71,623.11. In the Relief Call account the following totals are given: Relief Call, No. 1—May-July, 1881, $1,173.65; No. 2—March-August, 1882, $6,938.10; No. 3—July-October, 1883, $1,563.10; No. 4—February, 1884, $58.05; Relief Call, Mrs. Lucky, $843.80; total, $10,576.70. Degree of Honor, January to March, 1884, $41; making a grand total of $1,027,471.81.

In the following recapitulation of the Grand Receiver's account showing the cash on hand March 1st, it will be seen that affairs have been so well managed that so far from being a deficit, however small, there is a surplus of 57 cents caused by fractional deposits:

ONE of the strongest arguments to us in favor of the perpetuity and safety of the various well-founded insurance Orders, is the large number of men who are interested in the "regular" or "old-time" companies who have cast in their lot with us for the cheap insurance that they cannot find in their own companies. As a rule they do not proclaim at large their membership therein, but it surely leaks out; and even then many of them continue to cry out against the safety and final destination of the insurance Orders, when their lack of consistency is apparent and gives the lie to their professed belief.

DEPUTY CARROLL'S DISTRICT, No. 5, will hold a grand meeting at Hamilton Hall, corner of Steiner and Geary streets, on Friday evening, April 4th. Brother Carroll has been zealous and has made a very efficient officer, and there is no doubt it will be a very enjoyable affair.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

Grand Lodge Edition of the Watchman.

The PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN of March 29th will be worthy of preservation by all members of the Order. This carefully prepared edition, well filled with Order news and general and family reading, ought to satisfy the most fastidious that the standard journal of the A. O. U. W. on this coast fulfills its promises of progress and excellence.

To publish a journal of this character, handsomely illustrated and of exceptionally fine typographical appearance, ably edited, with full reports of topics of interest, is no easy or inexpensive task. It is not too much to claim that the WATCHMAN is, in these respects, ahead of any journal published in the interest of a secret beneficial Order in the United States, and its contemporaries without exception, as far as we are able to learn, cheerfully concede these facts. Out of the score of A. O. U. W. journals published in the interests of the Order, the WATCHMAN is by common consent placed at the head of the list. With a membership in the Order of over 16,000 in this State alone, the WATCHMAN enjoys the advantage of sole circulation among a constituency numerically second only to one other jurisdiction—New York. And when it is further taken into consideration that the WATCHMAN is also extensively circulated in the other Pacific States and Territories, it is readily seen that its reading constituency is considerably above that of New York in numbers, and its value as a business and advertising medium is correspondingly enhanced.

The edition of March 29th will be special in its nature. Among other things will be given a complete list of Representatives to the Grand Lodge which meets in this city on Tuesday, April 1st, with the names, numbers and numerical strength of their respective Lodges. A condensed history of the A. O. U. W. Grand Lodges of this State since their inception, will also appear, with a brief but comprehensive record of the Order on this Coast; full "Lodge Locals," general Order news, and editorials on timely topics. The illustrations will be varied, attractive and up to the WATCHMAN's usual standard.

An attractive poem, entitled "Fraternity," by one of California's most rarely gifted fraters, will appear, in addition to the usual interesting variety of home reading and literary miscellany, fraternal correspondence, etc.

We feel no hesitation in asking all Workmen to lend their individual aid in furthering the progress of the WATCHMAN, feeling that in so doing they also materially aid the Order. No such journal as the WATCHMAN can be published without substantial pecuniary assistance. In each Subordinate Lodge there is already a large proportion of subscribers, but it should be still larger, as the publishers have thus far sunk all the profits of the paper into its improvement and the building up of its circulation.

GRAND LECTURER READING has made arrangements by which the Lodge and secret work will be exemplified between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock noon, and 5 and 6 in the evening of each day during the session of the Grand Lodge.

Charade.

Within the crimson-curtained hall,
Within the home of wealth and pride,
Once paced my first with hasty tread,
And gazed upon his fair young bride.

His glance was stern, but hers was sad,
His face was fierce, and hers was cold;
"My second me," he harshly cried,
"Why have you done a thing so bold?"

The firelight gleamed upon her face
So ghastly white—her tears now dried—
As 'gainst my whole she calmly leaned,
And—"I will not reply," she cried.

Knitting Needles.

Every year added new names to the long list of widows and orphans living in the fishing town where Jane Dumfries had her home. It had always seemed to her dreadful that so many men should be lost at sea; but it was not until her own father was one of the lost that she realized how hard it was for those who were left.

She lived with her mother and grandmother, who had managed in some way to provide what was absolutely necessary for their comfort. But their strength had failed. They were disheartened. Hungry, too, they were, as Jane well knew, when she came out of the house; and making her way to the beach, she stood for a long time shielding her eyes from the glare and looking far out to sea, and thinking of her father's last words:

"Take good care of your mother and grandmother, and remember that the Lord is a present help in every time of trouble."

Surely this was her time of trouble, but where the help? She sat down on the sands, covered her face with her hands and prayed for help. She arose comforted and went back to the house, although she did not see how help was to come. As she stood on the threshold of their little kitchen she heard her grandmother say: "If things were here as they used to be in the old country, we could earn our living by knitting. We could all knit, and Jane could do as much as you or I."

This was just the suggestion she needed. There was a store two miles away, where a large variety of goods were sold; and the next morning, without telling even her mother what were her intentions, she hurried away. Upon entering she met the proprietor, who asked her what she wished to buy.

"I haven't any money to buy anything, but I want some flour to keep my mother and grandmother from starving; and please will you let me knit to pay for it?" she answered.

"And what can you knit?" responded the somewhat surprised merchant.

"Mittens and stockings," was replied. "Mother and grandmother can knit, too, and we all want to work. It hurts me to have my mother and old grandmother hungry."

"If I should let you have some yarn, would you bring me a pair of socks some time this week?"

"Yes, sir; and then would you let me have some flour?"

"What if I let you take the flour with the yarn?"

"I should be so glad I could almost fly home, and I would bring the socks just as quick as I could. If we had any candles we might finish them to-night."

"There is no need of that. I am going to trust you, and I expect you will do just as you promise."

"Yes, sir, I will."

She did not fly home. The basket she carried was quite too heavy for that; but she made all possible haste, and presently there were spread upon the table, tea, sugar, flour and six candles, all of which came to the hungry women as a gift from Heaven.

The next day, to the merchant's astonishment, Jane Dumfries appeared at the store fingers and shining bits of steel. And as the summer returned and visitors thronged the beach, not only did she find it hard to keep the store stocked with the dainty novelties she planned, but more than one order came to her from the hotels.

Her mother and grandmother caught something of her enthusiasm and skill, and now, after three years of happy industry, they are living in a cottage of their own, surrounded with every comfort. Jane has not laid aside her knitting needles with which her fortune was to be made, but she spends more time with books, and is about to enter school for a thorough course of study, her expenses to be paid with knitting needles.

Engine House of the Market Street Cable Road.

Some of the most interesting features of San Francisco to visitors from abroad are found in her numerous and well-conducted cable roads. San Francisco is the mother of them, and has quite a number more than any other city in the Union, although they are also now being rapidly adopted in Eastern cities. In a recent issue of the WATCHMAN, we gave views of the ferry terminus of the Market street cable road and a car and dummy on the track with a sectional view of the road bed, showing its construction, operation of the grips, etc. On this page we give a view of the engine house, where the motive power of the cables originate. It is located on the south side of Market street at the junction of Valencia.

At this point Valencia street leaves Market by a curve to the southeast, and Haight street branches off at an angle of about 35 degrees from Market to the northwest some 500 feet before Valencia is reached. The building contains two pair of engines with cylinders 34x48 and 24x48 inches, a large and small one being compounded to work in pairs. Only one pair runs at a time, the other pair being spare engines to use in case of a breakage. Each pair of engines furnishes 400 horse power in ordinary working, although they have a capacity of 700 horse power.

They were manufactured by the Union Iron Works of this city. These engines run the cables on the whole road and its branches, with the exception of the McAllister street line; or, to be more explicit, they run the cables reaching east to the ferries, west to the Valencia terminus and northwest to Golden Gate Park via Haight street.

Outside, the most prominent feature of this building is the chimney which forms an important landmark, and is next to the largest chimney on this coast, the largest being that of the Spreckels Sugar Refinery at the Potrero. The base of this chimney is about 24 feet square, the chimney tapering up till it is about 16½ feet square at the water table, 10 feet above the ground. For the rest of its height the chimney is in the form of an eight-cornered star. The inside is a circle 7½ feet in diameter. The top of the stack is 175 feet above its foundation. It was necessary again, bringing the socks and a pair of mittens which she had knitted of odd bits of yarn, and for which she was paid a good price. The socks were satisfactory. More yarn was given her, and she returned home with a cheering report. On her next business call she was accompanied by her mother, with whom a contract was made by which the family would be able to live comfortably.

They worked through all the short autumn days, resting for a little at twilight, when they often repeated such passages of Scripture as they could remember, Jane always concluding with her father's text: "The Lord is a present help in every time of trouble."

One day she came in from her long walk to the store, exclaiming:

"Mr. Rogers says I can make my fortune with my knitting needles, and I almost believe I can. He wants ever so many things knit, besides the socks and mittens; and, see! he has given me these for patterns to make them by."

The soft, fleecy articles by which she was to fashion others lay before her next morning, and over these she studied and experimented until at last she had conquered them.

From that time on there seemed almost a spell of enchantment hovering around Jane's to have this very high stack not only for good draft, but also to deliver the products of combustion high up out of the way.

THE USE OF MILK.—The consumption of milk is very much less than it might and should be. One quart of milk contains quite as much nutriment as one pound of average beef, and costs half as much money. Farmers use comparatively little milk, and much less than they could very profitably. Milk and crackers or bread—when it is sweet—make a most wholesome and nutritious food, and if used regularly for one meal every day would be found far more desirable and satisfactory than any other food. The average consumption of a family who purchase their milk is not more than one pint per day, and the majority of farmers use milk only in tea and coffee and rarely as food. Two or three quarts of milk a day might be used in every family with great benefit and economy. With crackers, bread, rice, sago or tapioca, it makes the most delicious puddings, and when sipped slowly while one is eating a cracker or a biscuit it makes a light supper, which will encourage restful sleep at all seasons, but especially in the warm weather.—New York Times.

Health Column.

SNAKE BITES AND HYDROPHOBIA.—In a recent lecture in New York, Dr. Woodbridge said: "In case of a bite of a venomous serpent, the old historic method of sucking the wound with the lips is one of the first things to be resorted to. If the poison is in the circulation, the use of strong brandy or whiskey, in quantities powerful enough to produce intoxication, must be resorted to. The bite of a mad dog should be cauterized at once, by a pencil of lunar caustic or by application of irons heated white. The peculiarity of hydrophobic poison is that it remains in the spot where the bite occurs for several days or weeks, and not until the poison ferments does it become dangerous. Dr. Hewett, a surgeon of London, allowed himself to be bitten no less than eighty times by rabid dogs, each time successfully cauterizing the wound. He fell a victim to his temerity, however, for one day he was found dead with a pistol shot from his own hand. A statement was left in his papers that he had neglected the cauterization too long, and feeling the first symptoms of hydrophobia, he preferred to die without the long agony."

HOW TO RETARD OLD AGE.—"To sum up shortly what has already been advanced, according to the teachings of modern science the most rational and certain means of retarding old age are by avoiding all foods rich in the earth salts, and by taking daily two or three tumblersful of distilled water with about ten to fifteen drops of diluted phosphoric acid in each glassful. Thus are the inimical salts held in solution, and their excretions daily effected. The means herein advocated have also another great advantage—viz: That they cannot possibly do any harm."

LENGTH OF LIFE INCREASING.—Dio Lewis thinks that before the year 2,000, centenarians will be very common, and even diamond weddings not very rare. He bases his belief on the fact that during the first six months of the present year 509 persons died in Philadelphia who had lived to or beyond the age of 80, against 489 in 1882, and 449 in 1881. Moreover, he tells us that in 1816 the average length of life in Boston was 21 years; in 1874, 42 years.

PROMPT CURE OF RINGWORM.—R. W. Taylor, M. D., in the Journal of Cutaneous Diseases, reports the best results from the use of a paint composed of a tincture of myrrh and four grains to the ounce of bichloride of mercury. Other skin affections are cured by the application of this remedy.

Household Hints.

SAND CAKE.—A German cake which is very good and has the merit of a novel name is called sand cake. To make it, take six ounces of blanched and pounded almonds, three-quarters of a pound of butter, nine ounces of flour, three tablespoonfuls of pulverized sugar, six eggs, and the grated rind of a small lemon. Stir the butter to a cream, mix with it the yolks of the eggs and grated lemon peel, then gradually add the flour and sugar, and mix thoroughly; after this, add the whites of the eggs, whipped until quite white and stiff. Work all these well together into a paste, then roll it out and make it up into three round cakes, standing them one on the top of the other with a layer of marmalade between each. They must be baked in a slow oven. When about half baked, pour an icing over the top, and put it at once back in the oven to finish baking. The white of one of the eggs used in the cake may be reserved for the icing; it must not be beaten, but it must be vigorously mixed with as much icing-sugar as will make it into a paste about the consistency of thick cream, when it will easily pour over the surface of the cake, and will form a thin coat of icing over it.

PUREE OF TURNIPS.—Wash and scrape a pound of turnips, boil over a slow fire in three pints of water, a quarter of a pound of butter, and half a pound of well washed rice. Be careful that the turnips do not stick to the bottom of the saucepan. When boiled, pass through a tammy and put the puree on the fire; if too thick, add a little milk. Stir with a wooden spoon, and when hot add four ounces of fresh butter and three wineglasses of cream. You can either hand fried toast or well-boiled rice with this puree.

OYSTER SOUP.—A quart of milk, one of oysters, a head of celery, a small onion, half a cupful of powdered cracker, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a speck of cayenne, salt and pepper to taste. Chop onion and celery fine. Put on to boil with milk for twenty minutes. Then strain and add the butter, cracker, oyster liquor, which has been boiled and skimmed, and finally, the seasoning and oysters. Cook three minutes longer and serve.

TO TEST MILK.—Slip a knitting needle into your pocket, says a well-known dairyman, and when you go to a meal dip it in the milk picher. If any of the milk adheres to the needle it is pure; but if it does not, the fluid is adulterated with water.

Supreme Recorder's Monthly Statement.

The monthly statement of the Supreme Recorder shows that in the four funds of the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction—General, Relief, Beneficiary and Contributed Beneficiary—the Supreme Receiver had in his hands Feb. 1st a balance of $1,228.32, and received up to March 1st $2,823.85, making a total of $4,052.17. He paid out warrants for $2,256.86, leaving a balance of $1,795.31. The Supreme Recorder furnishes the following summary for the month of January, 1884:

The Supreme Master Workman on Iowa Affairs.

OFFICE OF THE SUPREME MASTER WORKMAN, A. O. U. W.
OAKLAND, CAL., Feb. 20, 1884.
OFFICIAL CIRCULAR, No. 2.

To the Members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen—GREETING:—Knowing the deep interest taken by the membership at large in the issues pending in the jurisdiction of Iowa, and deeming the recent decision by the Court at Waterloo, in that State, of great importance, not only to our Order, but to all fraternal benefit associations, I address the brethren of the Order for the purpose of giving the facts relative thereto and the judgment of the court, as rendered.

In 1873 the Order was introduced in Iowa. In 1874 a Grand Lodge was organized, and became incorporated under the statute laws of the State. Section 2 of said articles of incorporation reads as follows:

"The objects for which said corporation is formed are these, to wit: To improve the moral, mental and social condition of the members of said incorporation, and to create, hold, manage and disburse a beneficiary fund for the relief of the members of said corporation under such rules and regulations as are now, and shall be hereafter, prescribed by the Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., of the United States and the Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W., of the State of Iowa."

Up to the last day of April, 1876, Iowa formed a part of the Supreme Lodge beneficiary jurisdiction. On that date it was set apart as a separate beneficiary jurisdiction. In 1880 the Relief Law was adopted by the Supreme Lodge and on April 15th, 1881, the first call under said law was made for the sum of ten cents per member, to aid the jurisdiction of Indiana. The Grand Master Workman of Iowa, J. D. Nichols, refused to send out the call, and was suspended from the Order, in accordance with Section 10, Article 9, Supreme Lodge Constitution, as was also, in turn, the Grand Foreman and Grand Overseer, they likewise refusing to issue the call.

In February, 1882, the Grand Lodge met and indorsed the action of its suspended officers, and on March 1st, 1882, their Charter was suspended by the Supreme Master Workman, as required by the section above referred to. Steps were at once taken to reorganize the Grand Lodge. Temporary officers were appointed, who at once issued Relief Call No. 1. All Lodges that paid the same were notified to send representatives to Marshalltown, Iowa, for the purpose of reorganization. On May 16th, 1882, the Grand Lodge was formally reorganized with a constitutional number. Officers were elected, and the suspended charter again put in force.

The Supreme Lodge, at its session in June, 1882, by a unanimous vote, ratified the action of S. M. W. Baxter in suspending the officers and charter of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, and recognized the reorganized Grand Lodge as the true and legitimate Grand Lodge of that jurisdiction.

Early in 1883 proceedings in quo warranto were commenced, to test the right to use the name and franchise of the Order, the officers of the re-organized Grand Lodge being the relators or plaintiffs, and the seceders being made defendants. After several delays brought about by the defendants, trial was had January 15 to 26, 1884. The following extract from the brief of the attorneys for plaintiffs, viz., Judge J. N. Lane and ex-Attorney-General J. M. Lane, of Davenport, Iowa, will show the prominent points relied upon for the verdict in their favor:

"We maintain, '1st. That that body is the legitimate corporate Grand Lodge, entitled to be recognized as such by the courts, which is the legitimate Grand Lodge of the national society known as a voluntary association, under which the Grand Lodge and subordinate Lodges in Iowa were organized, as a part of said Order or Association."

"2d. That adherence to and connection with the Order at large, and with its Supreme Lodge, its highest governing body, is an essential ingredient in such legitimacy, without which there can be no lawful Grand Lodge."

"3d. That when any part or fraction of the membership forming the constituency of a Grand Lodge, with or without action by the Grand Lodge itself, shall elect to sever its connection with the Order at large, and with the Supreme Lodge, by such seceding action it forfeits all right to constitute or take part in constituting or organizing the Grand Lodge, either incorporated or unincorporated, and that the membership dissenting from such secession are alone entitled to constitute and organize the corporate Grand Lodge, and to be recognized as such body."

"4th. On the question of regularity of the organization of a Grand Lodge, by that party of the membership who adhere to the Order and dissent from secession, the courts will be governed by the action of the Supreme Lodge, it being the highest authority in the Order, and empowered to determine conclusively all such questions, as they bear directly on its own consistency and membership. The seceding party having, by their own act, cut themselves off from the main body, have no concern with, or right to question the regularity of such organization, thus recognized by the authorities of the Order."

The main points presented by the defendants through their attorneys, viz: H. B. Fouke, J. D. Nichols, — Boise, — Tolerton, and J. R. Miller, were as follows:

"1st. The A. O. U. W. is an insurance company incorporated under the statute laws of Iowa, and, as such, can not do business in the State, except it comply with such laws."

"2d. That the Supreme Lodge is a corporation of the State of Kentucky—of like character—and is prohibited from doing business in the State of Iowa, except it comply with statutes of the State relative to life insurance companies."

"3d. That the Supreme Lodge, being a corporation of Kentucky, can not legally meet and transact business outside of said State, and that all acts of that body, when so meeting, would be null and void."

"4th. That the Supreme Master Workman, as a resident of the State of Michigan, could not act for the corporation of Kentucky while so living in the State of Michigan."

"5th. The relief law having been passed by the Supreme Lodge while meeting out of the State of Kentucky, was void, and of no effect."

"6th. The Supreme Lodge invaded the territory of the corporation of Iowa when it reorganized the Grand Lodge at Marshalltown."

"7th. That the members who adhered to the Supreme Lodge were the seceding parties, for the reason that they left the corporation of Iowa."

"8th. That the organized Grand Lodge is acting as the agent alone of the Supreme Lodge, a corporation of Kentucky, and not under the privileges granted by the corporation of Iowa."

"9th. That from and after the date the Grand Lodge of Iowa became incorporated, it became a distinct and different body from that before existing, and that in case any law of the Order contravened the statutes under which the act was made, it must be subordinate to the statute law."

"10th. That the Grand Lodge being a corporation, can by a majority vote elect to secede from connection with the Order at large, and can carry with it any property or franchise it may possess."

"11th. That under the laws of the Supreme Lodge, the suspension of the officers and charter of the Grand Lodge of Iowa was irregular and not in conformity therewith; and, further, that the reorganization at Marshalltown was likewise irregular and illegal."

After the introduction of evidence and arguments of counsel, the Court directed a verdict for plaintiffs.

The Judge in directing this verdict, in substance said that he could not regard the A. O. U. W. as an insurance organization, in the ordinary acceptance of that term. The evidence in the case, as presented, showed that it was a fraternal and benevolent association, quite similar to Freemasonry and Odd Fellowship, and kindred societies. Association with it was voluntary; it had, like other societies referred to, its Subordinate Lodges, which had representation in Grand Lodges, and the latter sent representatives to the Supreme body, which was its head and court of final resort in adjudicating upon all matters of discipline in its membership. The humblest member in its ranks could appeal to his Grand Lodge, and finally, if necessary, to the Supreme Lodge. He could not but regard the Order as instituted for the purpose of social, charitable and fraternal benefits, with the additional feature of contributing, under certain fixed laws, rules and regulations, to a fund to be used in alleviating the distress of the widows and orphans of its deceased members. The question of guaranteeing a certain amount upon the death of one of its members was only an incident of membership in the Order.

There is no dispute that the Relief Law, so called, was constitutionally passed; the only claim being that the Supreme Lodge should not meet elsewhere than in some certain place in the State of Kentucky. This argument has no weight, especially in view of the fact that the articles of incorporation of the Grand Lodge of Iowa are filed in Scott county, Davenport being made its headquarters; yet it is in proof by the defendants themselves that their Grand Lodge—or corporate body—has met at various places in this State, thus ignoring the articles of incorporation; and also by the still further fact that the Grand Recorder, one of the principal officers of the corporation, keeps his office, books and records in Waterloo, Black Hawk county. As a matter of fact, it appears that the suit now pending had to be instituted in this county in order to make the Grand Recorder a party to it.

These facts, the court intimated, convinced him of the conclusion first reached, that the A. O. U. W. was a fraternal organization; that the membership in Iowa was part of the same body, and that it was subject to the same laws, rules and regulations as all other parts; that the enforcement of its laws was merely a matter of discipline, over which the courts of the land had no power to interfere.

The only thing remaining to consider was whether any property rights were involved. He could not see where a dollar's worth of property or a cent's worth of insurance was involved. The members in Iowa, represented by the defendants, had in no manner been disturbed in any property rights by the suspension of the Grand Lodge Charter. The laws of the Order provide a remedy for their grievances, if they have any, and if they desire to resume their relations with their brethren the laws of the Order point out a mode by which they may do so.

A motion for a new trial having been made, the same was overruled and judgment entered as follows.

Here follows the legally worded decision and final judgment of the Court, the full text of all of which was given in the last issue of the WATCHMAN.

To all which defendants by their counsel except.

Bill of exceptions was presented and signed by the Judge; notice of appeal and supersedeas bond were filed by the defendants.

The Supreme Master Workman can congratulate the Order at large upon the favorable issue of this case, in which he feels all true Workmen will heartily join. That "United we stand, but divided we fall," is a maxim as true of our Order as of our country and government, we believe will be admitted by all. That in union of purpose and hearty submission to the enactments of the constituted authorities of the Order alone rests our future security and perpetuity, none will deny.

With an ever-increasing zeal for the advancement of the good work thus far accomplished, let us each and all renew our fealty to the Great National Order.

Fraternally submitted in C. H. and P.,
M. W. FISH,
Supreme Master Workman.

Attest: M. W. SACKETT, Supreme Recorder.

BOMBAY MORE CROWDED THAN LONDON.

One of the results of the Indian census, the various returns of which are now being collated, is to show that Bombay, the second city in the British Empire, is more crowded than London itself. The density of population in London is the most densely peopled parts is less than the density of twelve of the most crowded sections of Bombay, with a population of more than 430,000 people. These sections have an average population of 458.57 per acre. In Bombay the average of population is about 52 per acre; in London 49. The extreme in London rises to 222 per acre, whereas in Bombay it rises to 759. The population of the sections in which the crowding is double that of the most crowded divisions of London is equal to more than 37 per cent of the total population, but the area of these sections is only 3½ per cent of the island. In other words, 37 per cent of the population are crowded upon 3½ per cent of the surface of the land.

Reunion and Presentation in District No. 3.

A District meeting of Deputy Poland's District, No. 3, was held in Excelsior Hall, Mission street, on Thursday evening, March 20th. There was a good attendance of leading members of this District and representative Workmen from most of the Lodges in the city. Delegates from Franklin, No. 44, Harmony, No. 9, Burns, No. 68, and Memorial, No. 174 were admitted with honors, and the following select programme was given: Piano solo, Prof. Hahn; character recitation, H. H. Mayhew, P. M. W., who fairly brought the house down with laughter and merriment; quartet, Brothers Booth, White, Parent and Clark; character representation (Mark Twain), A. R. Gunnison, of Excelsior, his effort was true to life and highly appreciated; solo, "The Village Blacksmith," Jas. Irving, which was well rendered and well received; reading, "The Old Clock on the Stairs," Prof. E. Knowlton, a very artistic effort that was received with much favor and applause; comic song, Gus Pohlman, Recorder of Burns, No. 68; as usual he enlivened the funny part of the programme and at the close answered a hearty recall; humorous reading, Prof. Knowlton; piano solo, Prof. Howe, of Franklin, No. 44; original humorous poem on "The Opera," by Prof. J. P. Weil, read by J. W. Howard, P. M. W. The programme was supplemented by remarks from Deputies McKay, Poland, Lamont, Jordan and Carroll, Deputy Grand Master Danforth and E. F. Loud, P. M. W. of Valley, and the evening passed most agreeably. A magnificent case of silver knives, forks, spoons, etc., was then presented to Deputy Poland as a mark of esteem, by the District. C. N. Payson, P. M. W., of Franklin Lodge, appropriately presented the testimonial, which was fittingly received. Engraved on the case containing the silverware were these words, "Presented to D. D. G. M. Poland, by Lodges No. 8, 9, 44, 68, 126 and 174, March 20, 1884." On each piece was a monogram artistically done in German type. Brother Poland was taken entirely by surprise, and was highly gratified by this unexpected but deserved testimonial.

Reception of District No. 4.

Deputy Lemont's District, No. 4, gave its first grand reunion at B'nai B'rith Hall last Wednesday evening. There was no standing room left, and the immense company consisting of Workmen and their families were highly entertained by the following select programme: Introductory remarks, by District Deputy G. W. Lemont; song and encore, Mrs. Mary E. Parent; address, Past Grand Master W. H. Barnes, after which at earnest request he gave some of his specialties; quartette, Brothers Porter, Parent, Upton, Taylor; solo and encore, Ed. M. Moore; song, "Because of Thee," encore, Miss Ella Lark; piano solo, Brother Harry J. Lask; recitation and encore, Miss Ella Wise; vocal duet, "Life's Dream is O'er," Mrs. Mary E. Parent and Ed. M. Moore; cornet solo and double encore, Prof. I. C. Coggin, of the Second Regiment Band; duet, "Lambard Watch," and encore, C. A. Russell and R. H. Belcher; banjo specialties, Messrs. Winant and Riehn. This last was the ridiculous part of the programme. There was a little break in the programme caused by Brother J. G. Severance, P. M. W., who in his happy vein "caned" the Deputy of No. 4, in the following speech:

BROTHER LEMONT:—I desire to call your attention to the fact that through some gross carelessness or malice on the part of our Committee of Arrangements, a very striking feature designed for this entertainment has been omitted from the printed programme, and thus we have another illustration of the play of Hamlet with the Hamlet left out. I say it is a striking feature because it was intended that I should cane you to-night in the very presence of this large peace-loving assemblage, composed entirely of your friends. In fact, to you and me was assigned the performance of a little duet—because it is well understood that we can do it. This performance is to be upon a reed-organ—that is to say a cane. Throughout all ages, since the earliest creation of man, Cain has been famous; he slew his brother—it is supposed because he was able. From this little circumstance, it is claimed, originated the trite saying, so often repeated when anyone gets slewed and cuts up generally, that "he raised Cain." This, however, is not always a term of reproach, as is well illustrated in the life of Sir Claus Spreckels; for he was made a valiant Knight, a millionaire and the boss sugar monopolist of the Pacific, by raising cane.

And to illustrate further, I now propose to raise cane. I have been delegated by the entire brotherhood of District No. 4, for them and in their name, place and stead, to present you with this stick; not as emblematic, however, of what you have been in your great office, for you have by no means been a stick, but as a token of the friendship, love and esteem in which you are held by the brothers who know you best, and of this recognition and appreciation of the valuable services you have rendered the cause of Fraternity, Charity and Protection, with so much activity, faithfulness and zeal during the past year. Like yourself, it is made up of most excellent material; and it comes to you laden with the odors of the Yerba Buena gleaned from Noe Valley, and entwined with the Myrtle gathered from the Heights of Bernal. For this we believe you will prize it most. Like its ancient namesake of 6,000 years ago, it bears a mark upon its forehead. It is the monogram of our noble Order in whose grand work you have so industriously labored. It is not my hand alone that now extends to you this testimonial of brotherly love; it is the united arm of 600 good and true men, bound together by a mutuality of interests and hopes; and many years hence, when the few straggling locks, which your early piety may have spared to you, shall be touched by the frosty finger of age, it will serve to guide and support your tottering footsteps, and you may then well point to it with pride and tell your grand-children that it was the gift of your brothers.

Brother Lemont was somewhat paralyzed but soon recovered his speech, and in an eloquent and feeling manner responded. This souvenir is a very handsome cane of ebony with a heavy cross gold handle, on one end of which is his monogram, and on the other was the emblem of the Order with the letters "A. O. U. W." Engraved thereon are these words, "Presented to Geo. W. Lemont, District Deputy, G. M. W. of District No. 4, March 26, 1884." A recess was then had and terpsichorean exercises were indulged in until after midnight, filling a good list of dances. At one o'clock, carriages were called and this happy company separated. The following committees had charge and are responsible to a great extent for the success of the entire affair: General Committee, C. W. Schenck, Wm. G. Thomas, W. J. Thompson, R. P. Sanchez, J. L. Culin, D. Henderson, W. T. Thompson, C. C. Gilmore, A. Loane, Leon Carrau, A. V. Thompson, J. D. Thompson; Floor Director, Leon Carrau; Floor Committee, E. P. Duggan, S. J. Allen, C. Ph. Bolander, B. F. Hobart, T. Maxwell, H. Kosminsky, W. S. Symonds, G. Hoffman. Suspended over the stage were these words, "Welcome, District No. 4, A. O. U. W." There were over 1,200 persons present and the management and happy conclusion were the subjects of general congratulations.

Unity, No. 27.

On Tuesday evening, the 25th, this growing subordinate conferred the M. W. Degree on seven candidates. The work was done in a very commendable manner—not a ritual to be seen or used by any officer. Although it was a stormy night there was a good attendance as is usual with this Lodge. A motion was made and unanimously passed, that the Grand Lodge be invited to attend at the next meeting to witness the conferring of the J. W. Degree at their meeting April 1st. There is no doubt but that there will be a large attendance.

Union, No. 29, D. of H.

On the stormy evening of Thursday, March 13th, this new venture in the Degree of Honor was ushered into existence under the most auspicious circumstances, and while it is yet too early a day in its existence to make predictions as to its future, it is safe to say, judging from the material of which its membership is composed, that it bears within it all the elements of a success which may surpass the expectations of its most enthusiastic friends. Union, No. 29, was instituted by the D. D. of District No. 1, Brother Geo. Jordan, assisted by Deputies McKay, Poland, Lamont and Carroll. Large delegations from Silver Spray, No. 3, Golden Dawn, No. 10, and Evening Star, No. 23, D. of H. Lodges were present. Sixty-three new members were initiated by the following officers, besides three admitted by card: Mrs. Fishbeck, of Evening Star, acting as P. C. of H.; Mrs. Poland, of Golden Dawn, as C. of H.; Mrs. Lincoln, of Silver Spray, as L. of H.; Miss Quinlan, of Golden Dawn, as C. of C., and Miss Lyle, of Silver Spray, as S. U., assisted by Deputy McKay. Too much praise cannot be given these officers for the impressive manner in which the work was rendered. Sister Stanton the Organist of Silver Spray also kindly aided the new Lodge by acting in that capacity for the evening. There were no speeches made nor was there any attempt at entertainment indulged in, and even then the business which had to be transacted occupied the members until a late hour. One very pleasant episode of the evening occurred when the officers who had conferred the degree were each quietly presented with a handsome bouquet by the Grand officers who took their places. The following officers to serve the first term ending June 30th, were then elected and installed: Mrs. Lillie Wilson, P. C. of H.; Mrs. Susie Goodey, C. of H.; Mrs. Nannie Lee, L. of H.; Mrs. Augustine Fuller, C. of C.; Mrs. Kate Hoesch, R'dr; Mrs. Jennie Krebs, R'vr; Mrs. Rone Levy, Fin.; Miss Julia Springer, S. U.; J. H. Shaw, I. W.; B. F. M. Benson, O. W.; Dr. W. H. A. Hodgdon, Med. Ex.; J. H. Shaw, C. Brind and J. D. Martin, Trustees. The charter list comprised over 100 names, and has been added to since. As it is to be kept open for 30 days, the new officers will have their hands full in initiating candidates. It is expected that the majority of the members will avail themselves of the beneficiary feature of the degree. Union, No. 29, for the present meets in one of the pleasant and newly fitted up Lodge rooms of Druid's Hall, 413 Sutter street, on the second and fourth Thursdays of each month. Members of the D. of H. who will visit the baby Lodge may count on a hearty welcome and a pleasant evening.

Noe Valley, No. 185.

On Tuesday evening, March 11th, the meeting of Noe Valley was quite interesting. There was a good attendance, and the M. W. Degree was conferred on two candidates in a very creditable manner. A surprise was in store for them, as a delegation consisting of E. Danforth, D. G. M., and Deputies McKay, Jordan, Poland, Carrol and Lemont came in during the evening. A very enjoyable meeting was had, consisting of speeches, songs, feasting, etc. At 11 o'clock the delegation took their departure highly pleased with their visit and reception.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

Alameda, No. 5.

This old subordinate, located in the town of the same name, is, we are happy to state regaining much of its former prosperity. We are informed that the meetings are now quite well attended and that a number of new members have been initiated recently.

Haywards, No. 18.

This old pioneer of the Order was officially visited on the 25th by the Grand Lecturer, Brother Reading, who delivered a spirited address on the practical workings of this organization, not only in California but throughout the United States. The address was attentively listened to and created more than usual interest among the members. It was a delightful meeting, and one of instruction and encouragement.

Vesper, No. 62.

The flag of Vesper Lodge, No. 62, A. O. U. W., was unfurled to the wind from the flag pole on Odd Fellows Hall, for the first time, Tuesday. The back ground of the flag is white, with the border and letters "A. O. U. W., No. 62," in blue. The flag is very neat and tasty. The flag of the Independent Order of Chosen Friends was hoisted to the masthead, Wednesday. This flag consists of a red back ground with the border and letters "I. O. C. F., 64, Council," in white. These flags are hoisted to the breeze on the day of their respective meetings. They will serve as a mild reminder to some of their members who are somewhat dilatory about attending.—Livermore Reporter, March 15th.

Keystone, No. 64.

Last Tuesday evening we spent a pleasant hour with the brethren of Keystone in their fine Lodge room in Medical College Hall, Clay street, Oakland. It being the last meeting of the month, the main point of interest centred around the Financier's desk, where much business was transacted in a long recess granted for that purpose. Keystone is more than holding her own, having initiated several candidates of late and having an unmistakable air of prosperity.

Reliance, No. 93.

Last Wednesday evening the WATCHMAN representative visited the town of Alameda and enjoyed a very pleasant meeting with the brethren of this Lodge. Although of not a large membership—38—the brethren with scarcely an exception take much interest in the Lodge work and on this evening, which was not a pleasant one outside, and without anything especially calling them there, there were yet 50 per cent of the members in attendance, which all know is higher than the average in other Lodges. Reliance occupies the Odd Fellow's hall which is a very pleasant Lodge room elegantly furnished. Nearly all of the Workman there are Odd Fellows, these two societies being the only ones having organizations in the town. Dr. Samuel H. Hall, of Centreville, formerly of Burns Lodge, this city, is the M. W., Brother, E. A. Anderson, of Haywards, the efficient Recorder now in his fourth term, has only missed two meetings during that time, and those were on account of sickness. Bro. C. R. Nauert, the Receiver, is in his sixth term, and Bro. E. A. Richmond, the Financier, is in his second term. Under good of the Order, interesting remarks were made by Bros. Sherk, (G. L. Representative), Emery, Ralph, Ingalls, and others. The membership of Reliance is much scattered, and they deserve a great deal of credit for the efforts they make which result in so good attendance and such interesting meetings.

Newark, No. 169.

Newark Lodge, No. 169, celebrated its fourth anniversary on the evening of the 24th, with songs, recitations and an able address, elucidating the principles of the Order, by Grand Lecturer E. M. Reading. The hall was filled with the families and friends of the members of the Order, and after a most enjoyable entertainment the room was cleared, dancing commenced and kept up till 4 o'clock in the morning. The Committee of Arrangements deserves much praise for the success of the entertainment.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not. Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO., 252 Market Street, S. F., C.

Every Member of the A. O. U. W. Should Subscribe for the "Pacific States Watchman."

It is officially recommended by the Order on the Pacific coast.

Splendidly illustrated, reliable and chaste.

The WATCHMAN is published semi-monthly—on the 2d and 4th Saturday of each month.

It is one of the best home and family papers on the coast and this feature commends it to all Workmen and all members of their families.

The subscription price is only $2 per year, payable in advance.

It is a worthy representative of the Order, a profitable companion for every member to read and consult, and a friend that each can take pride in recommending to readers everywhere. Its circulation has been of immense benefit to our noble Order and many of its individual members, who read and patronize its many enterprising and sterling issues. All Workmen should lend it a helping voice and hand.

Advertisers will find it one of the best means of reaching a class of readers, including many Workmen and others who are large buyers in the aggregate.

Good Agents are wanted at all times, to whom large commissions will be paid.

SAMPLE copies sent free for circulation and examination with a view of increasing its subscription list.

WHEN YOU ATTEND
The A. O. U. W. Grand Lodge, or at any other time
VISIT SAN FRANCISCO, stop at the
BROOKLYN HOTEL,
BUSH STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome.

It is a matter of interest to Representatives to the Grand Lodge of the A. O. U. W., and all others visiting San Francisco at this or any other season, to know that the BROOKLYN HOTEL, so conveniently and centrally located, has been lately re-opened and completely refurnished with new carpets, bedding and other articles appropriate to a first-class establishment. Over $30,000 has been expended for this purpose.

The building itself has also been made more than ever desirable by increased conveniences for the numerous guests that frequent the house, from among the best industrial representative people from all parts of the State.

The popularity of the BROOKLYN has greatly increased under the recent proprietorship of Messrs. Bush and Schmidt, who give their personal attention in caring for the wants and comforts of all their guests, with liberality and impartiality.

Mr. Chas. S. Bush is a well-known, reliable gentleman, and a style of landlord that guests will meet repeatedly with pleasure and satisfaction.

Mr. Chris. Schmidt, well known in hotel circles, and for eleven years in the capacity of head clerk at the Russ House, where he made hosts of friends.

The rates at the BROOKLYN are remarkably low for the choice tables and other accommodations furnished, ranging from $1.50 a day, according to rooms, etc. Permanent guests are accommodated at even less rates, thus offering special inducements to families and single boarders, who want a quiet, steady, desirable hotel in the busy heart of the city.

Inquire for the Brooklyn Hotel coach, which will be found in waiting at all boat and train arrivals, to carry passengers to the house, free.

Rooms can be engaged by mail or telegraph, or further information gained by corresponding.

This hotel will be found an exceedingly desirable one, for nine out of ten of all the traveling public visiting San Francisco, and thus the best advice that can be given travelers is to try the Brooklyn Hotel first, and save unnecessary inconvenience and expense.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

OF THE

MUTUAL SELF-ENDOWMENT AND BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

OFFICE—OPPOSITE POST-OFFICE, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

J. N. RUSSELL, Sr., Sup't.

J. N. RUSSELL, Jr., Secretary.

THE OBJECT of this Association is to provide its endowments for Living Members, as well as benefit for families of deceased members, at the least cost consistent with perfect security, by issuing endowment and death benefit certificates.

THE PLAN embraces two forms—Life and Death. One pays at the death of a member, and the other pays during life at given periods, in accordance with endowment coupons attached to each certificate of membership. The Association is operated on the Mutual Plan. It has no stockholders to absorb its earnings, and no Trustees among whom to divide its surplus. There are no salaries or agents; they are paid from the fees and annual dues. There are no Lodge Meetings. Where there are enough members to form a club they select a club manager who collects all dues and assessments. All club managers and agents are required to give good bonds. This is the only Association which pays members during life on the installment plan, and educates the children of deceased members without cost to its members.

This Association was organized June 11, 1881, and has 10,000 members. Has paid $239,099.93 to February 22, 1884, to the Beneficiary. Is loaning from $10,000 to $15,000 per month to the living members.

Below we give the names, with post office address, of members in this department to whom loans or advances on their First Maturing Coupons have been made to date. The names are taken as they appear on our "Coupons Payable Book," and all in good standing are loaned in their order of maturity. Four-fifths of all collections on Endowment Certificates are passed to the credit of the Endowment Fund to be used in paying coupons as they fall due, and these advances are made to prevent an accumulation in the Treasury, to realize the interest for the credit of this fund and to assist the members at an early date. This department, established at Los Angeles, Cal., September 1883, has upwards of Twelve Hundred members, with a steady increase each month.

RANDOLPH HEADER.

Lightest, Easiest Handled and Most Economical Header ever Sold on this Coast.

It is very easy to operate and is 25 per cent. Lighter Draft than any other header of the same capacity sold on this Coast. We respectfully invite a thorough inspection of the "Improved" Randolph, when you will be convinced that it is the "Best in the World." The Spout is thoroughly ironed off and is extra long. Having two drapers in it, the grain passing between them, makes the elevation positive at any desired angle, and ENTIRELY PREVENTS THE WIND BLOWING GRAIN AWAY as it is being elevated, as is the case with all other machines. Every farmer will recognize that this is a point of superiority and a real grain-saving device which in quite windy weather will save enough grain each day to pay for running the machine. In the "Improved" RANDOLPH HEADER for 1883, manufactured expressly to suit California farmers, we will offer a Perfect Header.

Every Farmer needs One.

Light, Strong and Convenient.
NICELY FINISHED.

PRICES:

No. 515 d, Open, $80 00
No. 515 e, with Top, 100 00

This is the Best and Cheapest vehicle made for use about a farm.

Two-wheeled Buckboard.

McCormick Twine Binder.

to all its rivals. It is a front cut machine, all iron, and has the gearing completely encased and free from dirt or dust, and is a neat, light, handy machine. The ease with which it can be manipulated by its levers, and the effectiveness of the floating finger bar in cutting close and clean over rough or stony ground, or through the heaviest matted, dead or bottom grass, attest the perfection of its construction, which has given it a reputation far in advance of all other Mowers. It is the farmer's friend, and a fit companion on any farm for the McCormick Harvester and Binder or "Daisy" Reaper.

"THE BEST IN THE WORLD."

The presence of a McCormick machine in a grain field is a complete guaranty to the farmer that his crop will be secured economically, expeditiously and in the best of order, without any of the delays, mishaps and annoyances entailed by inferior machines. THIS IS THE MACHINE that won the only two First Prize Gold Medals offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England; one in 1878, as the Best Wire Sheaf Binder, and the other in 1881 as the Best Twine Sheaf Binder, and in both instances the awards were made after prolonged field tests, extending over several days, and in competition with all the other rival machines of England and America. No farmer should be without a McCormick Iron Mower, it being acknowledged as superior

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell streets, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER'S HEADQUARTERS—Office, No. 234 Post street, San Francisco, Cal. JAMES SIMPSON, M. D.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

As soon as possible a compilation of the legislation done at the recent session of the Grand Lodge will be made and sent out to all the Lodges in this jurisdiction. The complete journal will also be distributed in the course of two or three weeks.

A CHANGE of administration always interferes a little with the usual promptness with which we are able to transact business. Any unexpected delay may be attributed just now to this cause.

Now that Representatives have returned to their Lodges, there should be a general awakening all along the lines.

THE editor of the Overseer of St. Louis, Mo., attended the recent session of the Iowa Grand Lodge and picked up some matters of interest concerning the Iowa "rebels," some of which we repeat in his language: "The Rebel Grand Lodge of Iowa met in Davenport on the 5th inst. We learn from the officers' report that four new Lodges were established during the last two years, but they failed to tell us of the 60 Lodges they lost during the same period.—The Rebel Grand Master, in his report, speaking of the trial, says: 'The result of this proceeding, as announced by the judges, if not reversed, will be to give our name to the bogus Grand Lodge; but so far as our organization is concerned, it will not disturb its structure or diminish its membership.' It won't hey? We'll see, later.—The court has refused to grant a new trial to the seceders, and, like the Chinese, the Foulkeites must go.—The Secesh are hunting for a suitable name for their institution now, since they have to take down the A. O. U. W. sign.

DIRECTORY CORRECTIONS.—Several changes in our directory which have been sent in will have to lie over until next issue before correcting, as they were received too late for this issue. In an edition of this paper, where we consider ourselves liable to be crowded, as is the case this time, the directory and other standing matter is frequently placed on the first side of the paper, which is printed about a week before the paper finally goes to press.

Grand Lodge Aftermath.

It has been found to be impossible to get together all the interesting details of the recent Grand Lodge session in one issue of our paper. An accurate condensed report of the Grand Lodge session, however, appears complete in this issue, together with considerable in the way of annual official reports. The remainder of the interesting report of the Grand Master, and such other reports referred to as were of necessity omitted, will appear in our next number, together with the text of the eloquent con-

A Still Life Scene.

The engraving on this page is not, as our imp roguishly suggests, presented with any particular idea as to its appropriateness to the Lenten season, but as a copy of a fine local work of art. It is by our San Francisco artist, Brookes, who excels in still-life painting, and whose fish are considered the best that the artistic market affords. The grouping, back-ground and general execution, are here very carefully and tastefully planned and wrought out in fine detail.

LIBRARIES.—The practical benefit of havgratulatory speeches on "Good of the Order," that were delivered at the conclusion of the Grand Lodge session.

MR. CHAS. P. HITCH, Grand Recorder of the A. O. U. W., has in his office the largest book we have ever seen. It measures 4 feet 9 inches by 1 foot 11 inches, and contains nearly 7,000 square feet of paper. The book is used as a sales book, wherein the sales of supplies of the Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. are entered.—Paris (Illinois) Beacon.

WE acknowledge receipt of a copy of the by-laws of the A. O. U. W. Hall Association, from which we may make extracts in a future issue.

THE Lodges of Buffalo, N. Y., recently invited in a grand reception to their newly elected Grand Master Workman, H. B. Loomis.

ing a library and separate library room adjacent to the Lodge room is forcibly and favorably illustrated in Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, of this city. On the night of their district meeting the library room was visited by a large number of Workmen and their families to exchange books, and also as a reception room for guests. It seemed to be a sort of a free and easy resort for sociality and congratulations. Excelsior Lodge now has 750 volumes of well-selected books and about 30 changes or different books are taken out each meeting night. The library is open to the members of Excelsior and Golden Dawn, D. of H.

IN THE WRONG PEW.—Queries solely of a business nature connected with the Grand Recorder's Office should be addressed there, and not to this journal. "A Workman" of Oakland, who addressed us such a query, has probably had it answered through the proper channel before this.

Interesting Tables.

The following tables and comments are given by Supreme Recorder Sackett, as showing the average membership and death rate for the last five years of Kentucky, Georgia and Texas, which now comprise the bulk of the Supreme Lodge beneficiary jurisdiction:

Kentucky Jurisdiction.

Year.	Average membership.	Death rate per 1,000.
1879-80	2,054	18.98
1880-81	1,506	15.86
1881-82	1,570	12.10
1882-83	1,552	17.39
1883-84	1,477	21.63

Average for 5 years .. 1,646 17.19

Georgia Jurisdiction.

Year.	Average membership.	Death rate per 1,000.
1879-80	820	3.65
1880-81	847	10.70
1881-82	710	12.65
1882-83	994	16.11
1883-84	1,117	16.11

Average for 5 years .. 877 12.21

Texas Jurisdiction

Year.	Average membership.	Death rate per 1,000.
1880-81	570	12.28
1881-82	1,125	8.88
1882-83	1,602	7.49
1883-84	1,093	16.82

Average for 4 years .. 1,240 11.37

It would, to my mind, be better for the Order at large to reduce the maximum of of the Supreme Lodge beneficiary jurisdiction for a few years, making it as low as other associations are costing, then insist that a vigorous prosecution of the Order be had to fill up the ranks with good, healthy material. This will result in a much reduced death rate, and the burden to be borne by the Order at large will be reduced in place of increased by the reduction of the maximum of the Supreme Lodge beneficiary jurisdiction. What I mean to say is this: I believe it to be bad policy—as soon as a jurisdiction, by reason of slow growth or decrease in its membership, and consequent increase in death rate, to increase its maximum under the relief law, thereby practically paralyzing all effort to build up the Order, which is its only avenue of relief. Better extend the helping hand at that point that will retain the membership already in the Order, and which will maintain favorable competition with other societies. And then by zealous effort any jurisdiction can soon render itself prosperous, and not be a burden on any other part.

An overlook of the Order to-day shows a higher degree of prosperity than ever before enjoyed. Every jurisdiction is prosperous and their assessments comparatively light, except in the Supreme Lodge beneficiary jurisdiction and that of Tennessee.

The following Committee on Credentials were appointed by the Grand Master Workman: Harry J. Lask, of No. 8, San Francisco; J. H. Barrett, of No. 89, Elmira; Frank S. Poland, of No. 126, San Francisco.

The Committee on Credentials, after recess, made a report, which was adopted. The report set forth that Lodges Nos. 28, 157, 176, 195, had not made returns of representatives elected. The two former made returns later in the session. The report also recommended the conferring of the P. M. W. degree on those authorized to receive it, rejected the credentials of Brother Edward Polifka, of Lodge No. 156 (a Receiver of three years' standing, who desired the P. M. W. degree), and recommended that Brother Jas. Simpson, M. D., Grand Medical Examiner, have the degree of P. M. W. conferred upon him, as per Supreme Lodge law. The matter of Brother Polifka was later in the session referred to a committee who investigated and recommended his admission, which recommendation was adopted.

The several members were then introduced, and the Grand Lodge degree conferred upon them by W. H. Barnes, Past Grand Master Workman.

Supreme Master Workman, M. W. Fish, was here presented at the altar, and welcomed by the Grand Master Workman. On being conducted to the platform he offered a few words of congratulation and thanks to the Grand Lodge.

Invitations to visit the reception of Valley Lodge, No. 30, and the meetings of Olympic, No. 127, Unity, No. 27, and Triumph, No. 180, were read and accepted by the Grand Lodge.

Afternoon Session.

J. H. Barrett, of No. 89, tendered his resignation as a member of the Committee on Credentials, which was accepted, and Brother Wm. Osterman, of No. 43, appointed in his stead.

The reading of the minutes of the last session was dispensed with.

Grand Master Workman Jas. T. Rogers then read his report, an abstract of which will be given elsewhere. It was received with great applause, and referred to the following Committee on Distribution: A. P. Murgotten, of No.

17; J. M. Camp, of No. 30, and Geo. Lissenden, of No. 23.

The reading of the reports of the Grand Recorder, Grand Receiver, Grand Trustees and Finance Committee were dispensed with, and the reports referred to the Committee on distribution. These likewise will receive attention elsewhere in this journal.

On motion, the case of J. A. Greenwood vs. Amador Lodge was referred to the following committee: Wm. McWilliams, of No. 75; D. S. Hirshberg, of No. 35; E. C. Foushee, of No. 200; Silas Perry, of No. 138, and H. Lehman, of No. 158.

Wm. H. Jordan, P. G. M. W., read his report as Supreme Representative, which was received and referred to the Committee on Distribution. By a rising vote the thanks of the Grand Lodge was tendered to Brother Jordan for his eminent services as Supreme Representative, at the last session of the Supreme Lodge. Further reference will also be made to this report under the proper head.

The Grand Master Workman appointed the following committees: Good of the Order—F. Adams, No. 212; J. N. Block, No. 27; W. H. Jordan, No. 7; R. H. Witherell, No. 173; L. Finnegan, No. 17. Resolutions—W. W. Morrison, No. 53; Sam. Booth, No. 126; A. Cobler, No. 55; C. Brind, No. 41; and R. W. Crump, No. 34—to whom all resolutions should be referred without debate.

The Committee on Distribution reported on the various reports, approving, and recommending their segregation and further reference to other committees, and to have them incorporated in printed reports of the Grand Lodge. Adopted.

The matter of the application of Friendship Lodge for payment of the Beneficiary Certificate of the late Brother O'Shaunessy, was referred to a committee of three lawyers, as follows: Bros. D. McClure, J. N. Young and A. Daggett.

A special committee consisting of W. B. Lyon, H. T. Smith, Saml. Booth, J. D. Thompson, and J. D. Martin appointed to investigate the case of San Diego Lodge No. 160 vs Wilmington, No. 130, reported in favor of having No. 130 pay to 160, $64 75, amount incurred for nurse, board and medicine of a sick brother, Wm. H. Ormsby, who afterwards died, but No. 130 was not holden for any other claims.

Brother J. N. Young, of the Committee on Laws and Supervision, made a report in the Polifka case, which was adopted, recommending his admission on the following statements from the Constitution:

Article 8, Sec. 3—Representatives to the Grand Lodge shall be elected annually at the first stated meeting in January, from among the P. M. W.

Article 2, Sec. 2—* * All Representatives to the Grand Lodge must be Past Master Workmen, or if necessary to fill the quota, a person or persons elected for such purpose from among the M. W. Degree members of such Subordinate Lodge.

The Supreme Lodge, during the session of 1883, authorized Grand Lodges to confer the Degree of Past Master Workmen upon Recorders, Receivers and Financiers of Subordinate Lodges who have served as such for three consecutive years, when their respective Lodges shall by resolution so request. (See Supreme Lodge report 1883, 12 pages 68 & 86.)

The reports of the Grand Trustees and Committee on Laws and Supervision were submitted, and a communication from the Representative from Higuera Lodge, No. 194, who reported concerning the murder of Bro. Frank Corea, that it was evidently done by interested parties to obtain the insurance, and asked the Grand Lodge to contribute to the standing reward of $500, a further reward for the capture of his murderers. These matters were tabled for the present. The official reports mentioned will receive attention under the proper head.

THE number of the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN dated February 23d is profusely illustrated with scenes appropriate to the Washington anniversary which it commemorates. Among other cuts is a portrait of the "Father of his Country," and a large wood engraving of the Capitol at Washington. The publishers speak of this issue as their "patriotic number," and they deserve credit for their enterprise. The WATCHMAN is a good paper, even if it is a little "off" on the subject of graded assessments.—Royal Arcanum Journal.

[Thanks for the compliment, Bro. Journal. We think, however, that time will prove that we are "on" in relation to the subject of graded assessments.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

WE take this occasion to commend our Standing Committee on Appeals and Grievances. Their labors have been arduous and faithfully performed. Brother J. G. Severance, P. M. W., has been on this Committee for the last three years. It is but a just tribute to their labors to say that in every case their decisions have been sustained.

Fraternity.

[Written for the WATCHMAN by HALL F. WRIGHT.]

'Mong all the hoarded gems of Nature
 And of Art, what shall thine emblem be?

A Temple grand art thou; designed
 In Heaven; thy Builder, Maker—God:
 Lay his foundations, deep are laid Within the hearts of men. Upon thine altars chaste,
 Gory-handed pious Zeal, ne'er prone did
 Lay his victim bound; and thus corrupt
 The minds of men, to think that suffering,
 Helpless Innocence, could full atonement make
 For all the damning crimes of Power.

Justice, within thy forum, sheathes her Rusty, unused sword, all idly sitting at the Feet of Love, who (arbiter supreme) with Potent scepter mild, does rule the realm,
 And unto each his utmost meed of dues
 Vouchsafe, without resort to force.

When Illness or relentless Death assails
 The happy home, around the suffering ones are Loving vigils kept; and Love doth cool the Fevered brow, and soothe the troubled mind,
 And rarest viands bring; and sympathy and hope;
 If haply thus to fan to life the waning ashen spark
 And bring back radiant beams of joy, within Those hearts bowed low with apprehensions dire.

When Skill and Sympathy and Love, their last Resource have tried, yet Death will have his own.
 Then gentle fingers close the leaden eyes,
 And loving hands repose the passive, waxen form,
 And softly lay it in the breast of Mother Earth;
 and

Strew with evergreen and flowers and tears,
 The loved one's tomb, and leave it all with God.

Back to the home all desolate, the stricken ones return,
 (The hearthstone cold, the vacant chair, an absence
 Palpable and dread, wring their sore hearts
 Down to the very dregs of woe), all crushed
 And dazed by weight of grief; nor care to live nor die.

Protection now up-bears her ample shield
 And forms a refuge all secure, and turns Else fatal shafts of harm, wide from their trembling mark.

Then radiant, smiling Hope with anchor strong
 Her buoyant craft will moor, and flood the Weary, willing ears with tales that do Intoxicate the mind; and thus dispel the Lingering clouds; and let warm sunbeams flood
 The heart, and germinate again the seeds of joy.

Erstwhile Time, with healing on her wings Binds up the aching heart, allays the poignant grief,
 And firmly knits the brave right arm to battle
 With the world, and win deserved success.
 Newcastle, Placer Co. Cal.

A HAPPY WEDDING.—On the 9th inst., Miss Mollie Lewis, daughter of E. Lewis, P. M. W. of Golden Gate, No. 8, (and who is known as the "Father of the A. O. U. W. in San Francisco") was united in marriage to Sidney M. Cooper, of Portland, Oregon. The impressive ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Cohn, at the residence of the bride's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Olcovich, No. 1714 Geary street. The parlors were canvassed and the decorations and floral offerings were profuse and tasteful. One of these was a large floral bell suspended from the folding doors between the parlors, under which the ceremony took place. In the upper chamber a table ten feet long was completely filled with useful and ornamental presents of gold, silver, bronze and bric a brac; besides a check was given for $3,000 by Brother Lewis, and sums from other members of the family and friends, aggregating $5,000. The evening was pleasantly spent in dancing, singing and feasting, the menu having been prepared by a noted caterer. During the evening more than 40 telegrams were received extending congratulations, a number of which were from New York, Chicago, Savannah and Portland.

THE copy of the WATCHMAN sent to each Subordinate Lodge in care of its Recorder, is the property of the Lodge and should be kept on file. All articles from Grand or Supreme Lodge officers should be read in open Lodge. Recorders will also find other matters of interest that can with profit be read aloud under "Good of the Order."

Life: What Is It?

[Extract from an address delivered before Southern California Lodge, A. O. U. W., by WALTER LINDLEY, M. D., Los Angeles, Cal.]

Suppose you were a tree and yet could reason, and saw for the first time a man walking. The question would arise at once, what makes that thing go? Or suppose you are what you are, and for the first time saw a little sprout develop into a large tree; the question would at once arise, what makes the change? It is just this question that has agitated the scientific mind for centuries. There is one set of men who have tried to prove that life could be developed spontaneously from matter that is not living. About ten years ago they thought they had succeeded, but finally they were forced to acknowledge that their work had been defective, and to-day the whole scientific world acknowledges that no man has succeeded in producing in his laboratory living matter out of non-living matter.

The scientist has gone down the scale of vegetable life to the fungus, the diatome, and last the bacteria, all so small, so very small that it takes a powerful microscope to see them, and yet they are alive. The lowest form of vegetable matter is the bacteria, yet as small as this living thing is, no chemist can reproduce it. Some say that it is simply non-living matter altered. But the question arises, what brought about this change? The very simplest kind of living matter reproduces its kind by division; but what causes this division? All studies in this direction point positively to one answer, viz.: that there is some power greater than the power of human chemists that puts life into the animal and vegetable kingdom. Take the diatom—so very, very small, and yet examine them with a microscope and you will find their arrangement is most beautiful and harmonious. Everything shows the hand of a designer. You and I join the Ancient Order of United Workmen; we swear that we believe in God, yet we swear it in a mechanical sort of way, without really thinking much about the depth and import of that oath—nevertheless we are simply affirming what the great scientists of our day are saying, that there is a first great Cause.

This life which causes us to think and act is not accidental, but is rather the spirit of the Creator within us. The great philosopher said: "You must not talk about burying or burning Socrates, as if I were suffering some terrible operation. Such language is inauspicious and depressing to our minds. Keep up your courage and talk only of burying the body of Socrates."

One of the most beautiful teachings of our Order is in harmony with the above thought—the immortality of our souls; the thought that death is simply the separation of the life within us from the body. You and I have our own work to do; with some it is in one line and others in another line. Our time is occupied so that we can by no means thoroughly investigate this subject of life and immortality, but let us not let go of the teachings of our fathers on these subjects, until they have been proven false. If I were as ready to try new remedies that I read of in medical journals as some people are to adopt new theories of belief in regard to life, I would soon be without any patients. Suppose a meddler were to point out a defect in an old friend, and you were to discard him and take up some person else for your intimate. You would soon find other defects and probably more serious ones in your new friend. No, let us retain, cling to and defend our old friendships, our old beliefs, until they are proven to be radically wrong and something better is offered in their stead. By all means let us not exchange them for cruel uncertainties.

The Outlook and Retrospect.

The Grand Lodge has again met, transacted its business, and the members have gone home to their respective constituencies. We always look forward to the annual sessions of the body with mingled feelings of pleasure and distrust. It is pleasant to meet with such an eminent body of our fellow men as constitutes our Grand Lodge. Acquaintance with such men is worth something, not only in a social and fraternal, but also in a business point of view. Then there is a constant need of some legislation, which must come from the Grand Lodge, if it come at all. On the other hand, there is the danger of legislating too much. As a rule, we get too much law, and too many changes are made in what is really necessary to have. In looking over the work of our Grand Lodge at its recent session, we believe as a rule, it was wisely done, but in some cases, we fear that experience will show that what was intended as an improvement will prove the reverse. The recommendations of the Grand Recorder were adopted without dissent. Should our Representatives to the Supreme Lodge be able to procure amendments to the general laws of the Order in accordance with our expressed desire, a long stride in advance will be made in the matter of simplifying our laws relating to the reinstatement of persons out of the Order, and the levying of assessments. We trust the Supreme Lodge will not turn a deaf ear to our desires in this regard. On the whole, we feel well pleased with the Grand Lodge session. It ought to be productive of much good to the Order. It ought to eventuate in giving us a large increase of members. Every Representative should feel that on him rests the responsibility of doing something to swell our ranks. We may not expect any great increase, but our ranks can be kept full and more, and must be if we hope for light assessments.

There is opportunity for some good effective service in organizing Degree of Honor Lodges, provided they are of the beneficial class. The fewer we get of those of a merely social character, the better. They are, as a rule, ephemeral affairs that result in no prominent good to the Order. But beneficial Lodges will stand on the same foundation as our regular Subordinate Lodges and cannot well prove otherwise than successful.

There was one thing at the last Grand Lodge session that should cause serious apprehension, and be carefully avoided in the future, if possible. While it may not be productive of any especial evil in the present instance, still it is mere good luck if it does not. We refer to the hour or two of hasty legislation that characterized the close of the last day's session. This, the WATCHMAN deprecates. More mischief to the Order may be caused in an hour of undue haste, than would be counter-balanced by a year of repentance in sack cloth and ashes. Let all things of this kind be done carefully, soberly, decently and in order.

Official Endorsements.

The following pleasing compliments to the organ of our Order on this coast appear respectively in the annual reports of Grand Master Workman J. T. Rogers and Grand Recorder H. G. Pratt, presented at the seventh annual session of the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., recently held in this city:

To the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN every Workman is indebted. It is clean in its morals, cultured in its selections, and manly in its exhibitions of brains and taste. It is fit for the cabin, refined for the parlor, instructive to the professional student, and ever welcome to the Lodge room. It has achieved this distinction without one cent from this body. As a recognition of its labors, let us enshrine the memory of its loving work, and offer a benediction for its welfare.

To the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN the Order is largely indebted for the continued growth and prosperity of the Order in this Jurisdiction. Amongst all the able journals of our Order, none can rightfully claim superiority over the WATCHMAN, a fact I believe very generally acknowledged and appreciated by our membership.

The above endorsements are all the more acceptable when we consider their high source and the fact that they come entirely unsolicited. It is seldom a newspaper receives so great compliments, and especially in so few and frank words. We could wish nothing better than to prove as worthy of them as Brother Rogers has of the honors he has modestly and honestly won in the responsible office from which he has just retired, or as Brother Pratt has in the honors he so meritoriously continues to wear and achieve.

SUPREME LODGE EXCURSION.—A Grand excursion from Portland, Oregon, to various points in the Eastern States, under the auspices of the Delegates attending the Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., is announced by Past Grand Master J. A. Child and Grand Recorder R. Newcomb. The above mentioned excursion is planned to leave Portland, Oregon, May 15th, by the Northern Pacific railroad. Members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, their families and others, wishing to take advantage of the excursion rates, can receive full information by addressing the aforementioned brothers at Portland, Oregon.

WE acknowledge receipt of a bound copy of the Grand Lodge proceedings of Missouri, noticed in a recent issue.

Grand Master Workman Jas. T. Rogers then tendered his resignation as Grand Master Workman, which was not accepted.

Constitutional Amendments.

The Committee on Amendments submitted a partial report, and the following amendments, which they recommended, were adopted:

Amendment No. 1 to Article VI, Section 2, "Duties of Officers," page 10, line 9, Constitution of Grand Lodge, edition of 1884: Add after the words "A Committee of five on Amendments," the words "A Committee of three on Credentials."—By Harry J. Lask, of No. 8.

Amendment No. 2 to Article XVI, of Constitution of Subordinate Lodges: Add after the word "Recorder" on the first line, the words "and Financier."—By Harry J. Lask, of No. 8.

Amendment No. 3, to save subordinate Lodges the annoyance of remitting to the Grand Medical Examiner the 25 cent fee on each examination. The committee recommended to amend Article VI, Section 12, by striking out the concluding words, "to be paid by the applicant," and adding in lieu thereof the following: "Each to be paid by the Grand Lodge in monthly settlements, at the close of each month, by warrant to be drawn on the Grand Receiver in the usual manner." The paragraph when amended to read as follows: "The fee allowed the Grand Medical Examiner for revising medical examinations shall be twenty-five cents each, to be paid by Grand Lodge in monthly settlements, at the close of each month, by warrant to be drawn on the Grand Receiver in the usual manner."—By the committee, on suggestion of J. W. Watson, P. M. W. of No. 3, and Deputy Grand Recorder.

Bureau of Relief.

The committee reported without recommendation concerning the proposed Bureau of Relief amendment, that one hundred and twenty Lodges reported the result of their considerations of the subject, and of that number fifty Lodges reported as favorable to the proposed amendment with certain modifications, while seventy Lodges voted against it unconditionally. The whole matter was laid on the table, and was afterwards indefinitely postponed.

The unfavorable report of the Committee on Laws and Supervision relative to the reinstatement of M. Wolf, formerly of Tucson, Arizona, was adopted and passed to print. Mr. Wolf, who had allowed himself to be suspended for neglecting his financial standing, desired permission to become a member of Bay City Lodge, No. 111, Eureka, Cal. The committee were of the opinion that he should apply to the Lodge of which he was a member at the time of his suspension. The report of the Committee was afterwards adopted.

Brother J. N. Block, of the Committee on Good of the Order, made a partial report relating to the consolidation of two Lodges in San Luis Obispo, viz: Higuera, No. 194, and Oliver, No. 212. The committee recommended that this Grand Lodge take no action in the matter, but that the question be left to the pleasure of the two Lodges. Adopted.

Smoking in Lodge Rooms.

The same committee made the following report in the case of Isaac Birnbaum vs. Washington Lodge, No. 60, which was adopted:

We endorse the sentiment of the Grand Master Workman, in so far as he disapproves of unlimited and indiscriminate smoking in the Lodge rooms, and recommend the adoption of the following law: That smoking in all Lodge rooms be prohibited, excepting at recess, or under head, "Good of the Order," and then only after the Master Workman has asked and obtained consent of the brothers present.

On the matter pertaining to the offering of a reward by the Grand Lodge for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer of Brother F. Corea, the committee being divided upon the policy of such action, referred the whole subject without recommendation. It was referred back to the committee, which afterwards reported unfavorably on the proposition which report was adopted.

Reports of Committee on Appeals and Grievances.

In the matter of H. B. Davidson, of Chico Lodge, No. 58, involving the right of a District Deputy to grant a verbal dispensation to confer two degrees in one evening, the committee reported against such a proceeding, and upheld the ruling of the M. W. The report was adopted, with the additional motion that, as the error was no fault of the candidate's, his beneficiary certificate should be declared valid.

The committee recommended the approval of the following decisions of the Grand Master Workman, which are more fully set forth in the abstract of the G. M. W.'s report, published elsewhere, and which were adopted seriatim, viz.: Geo. Martin vs. Bay View Lodge, No. 159; the reinstatement of West Onley, of Oak Grove, No. 198; the retaining of membership of Wm. Solen, of San Mateo, No. 192; the refusal of the claim of Mrs. Alpaugh; special assessment decision for Folsom, No. 109; Medical Examiner decision of Monterey, No. 98; renewal of beneficiary certificate in case of W. A. Holt vs. Santa Rosa, No. 28; decision in case of Chico, No. 58, vs. Mt. Hamilton, No. 43.

In the matter of the application of Bay District, No. 226, for extension of time from 30 to 60 days to keep charter open, the decision of the G. M. W. was reversed for the following reasons: "By Section 2 of Article VI of the Grand Lodge Constitution, the granting of charters is made one of the special prerogatives of the G. M. W.; the only restriction placed upon that power is, that in a district where there are one or more Lodges, the recommendation of a majority of such Lodges must be first attained. An arbitrary rule limiting the discretion of the G. M. W., as to time for closing the charter, could work no good, and might often result in great mischief."

The majority report of special committee in the case of J. A. Greenwood vs. Amador Lodge, No. 133, presented by Bro. D. S. Hirshberg, was adopted. This report sustained the action of the M. W. and Recorder of the Lodge in making full arrangements for the funeral of a deceased member, and bound the Lodge to the payment of expenses of the same.

In the case of Arthur Fleming vs. Hearts of Oak, No. 61, the Committee on Appeals and Grievances decided that the suspension of Brother Fleming's beneficiary certificate was erroneous and should be reversed, he not having been properly notified of assessment, and further, that the fine imposed upon him for alleged negligence in office was contrary to law. Adopted.

The Finance Committee, reported as follows: on bills of expert and printing bills of the G. M. W.: "Your Finance Committee, to whom was referred bills of expert for examining books of the Grand Recorder and the Grand Receiver, and bill of Bancroft & Co. for printing same, would beg leave to refer the same to the Grand Lodge. We are also compelled to take the same course in regard to the bill of H. A. Peabody, of Ukiah, for printing report of Grand Master, for amount of $117. Your Committee had contracted to have this work done, which would have been at an expense of $57.20. The contractors making price of journal in view of having the setting up and printing of the various reports. We therefore would prefer if the general body would audit the bills. The bills were allowed.

Supplemental Report of the Finance Committee.

As has been the custom of this, your Finance Committee, we have invited bids for the printing of the daily proceedings and journal of the Grand Lodge, and Messrs. Neal & Co. being the lowest bidders, the contract was awarded them.

Your committee would recommend that, in order to simplify the accounts of this Grand Lodge, a separate set of books be opened for the accounts of the Degree of Honor, and a separate annual report be made as to the state of such fund.

Respectfully submitted in C. H. and P.,

That a member of the A. O. U. W. cannot hold the office of Master Workman and hold the office of Trustee in a subordinate Lodge at the same time.

Grand Medical Examiner.

By a unanimous vote, Dr. Simpson, Grand Medical Examiner, was accorded the privileges of all other elective grand officers, and it was further ruled that the decisions of the Grand Medical Examiner be final. Authority was also granted and it was pronounced to be one of the most important duties of the Grand Medical Examiner to thoroughly investigate every death occurring from chronic or organic disease within a limited time after admission to the Order, to discover, if possible, whether the local Medical Examiner was at fault in recommending a Beneficiary Certificate.

It was decided in the case of M. J. C. Galvin, M. W., vs. G. A. A. No. 221, that a motion to reconsider must be made by one who voted with the majority, and at the same session at which the action was taken.

Miscellaneous Notes.

DURING the session of the Grand Lodge, Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. W., conferred the Grand Lodge Past Master Workman's degree at eighteen different times and on 178 Past Master Workmen.

THE WATCHMAN concurs in the following compliment from the Call to our new D. G. M.: "The appointment of Eugene F. Loud as Deputy Grand Master of the State of California is a graceful compliment to one of the most efficient workers of California. Holding one year the same position under G. M. W. Taylor, two years under G. M. W. Barnes, there is but little doubt but what his present service under G. M. W. McClure will be of great advantage to the Order."

THE elegant life-size portrait of Grand Master Workman Rogers was the joint work of A. O. Carpenter and daughter of Ukiah. Mr. Carpenter photographed it and Miss Carpenter worked it up and retouched it in crayon.

THE many friends of Grand Recorder Pratt were grieved to know that illness detained him from the Grand Lodge session a great part of the time. We are happy to state that he is now improving and able to be at his post regularly again.

To Representatives to the Grand Lodge.

We send an extra copy of this issue, containing our report of the recent Grand Lodge session, to each Representative present (according to the list given in our report). This will furnish them with the earliest data published of the proceedings, which will be well calculated to aid them in rendering an oral account of the session to constituents.

We would here forcibly remind Representatives that their duties are by no means fulfilled until an intelligible, condensed report is made at a meeting of their Lodge, and furthermore that there are parts of the proceedings not suitable for printing that will be highly appreciated when verbally explained to brethren while in secret communication.

We also ask those brethren receiving extra copies of this issue to invite the brethren to send us local correspondence and to aid them in securing and forwarding subscriptions for the WATCHMAN.

A RESULT OF THE PRIZE POEM CONTEST.—Public spirited as usual, Brother Sam Booth has made use of his prize obtained on the best poem on Fraternity published in these columns, in securing an appropriate and beautiful adornment for the library of Excelsior Lodge, of which he is Past Master. In this he was assisted by Past Grand Master Barnes, who also contributed toward the object named, the prize received for his poem. The result is a large and faithful group photograph by Taber of the principal representative Workmen of this State. The picture was taken during the recent Grand Lodge session, and contains Supreme Master Workman Fish, Grand Recorder Pratt and Past Grand Master Jordan sitting in the fore-ground, and back of them in a standing group, Past Grand Masters Brewer, Taylor, Barnes, Rogers and Grand Master McClure. The photograph is a valuable souvenir fit to grace the walls of any Lodge room in this State. Lodges desiring a copy can probably soon procure them through the WATCHMAN, as we expect to enter into negotiations whereby they can be supplied to Lodges at a very reasonable figure.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times), by turning a leaf.

THE mountains on either side of the Sacramento valley are well covered with snow, or were last week, while in the valley itself trees are bursting into leaf, and flowers are blooming.

The Fireside.

An April Violet.

(WRITTEN BY MARY LUTHELL CORDELL.)

The many April clouds hang dark and low,
The tender grass with April rains is wet,
My listless, idle fingers lightly clasp
An April violet.

Its fragrance fills the quiet, firelit room,
I hear the muffled tread of ghostly feet;
The silent air is full of phantoms fair,
And visions strange and sweet.

Once more, once more a child's light footsteps fall
On greenest grass of Aprils past and dead,
And childish lips rain showers of kisses down
Upon the violet bed.

And, as the tin, prying fingers search
And press, with tender touch, the leaves apart,
The flowers breathe forth a benediction sweet,
Which fills her happy heart.

Once more, once more I see a fair-haired girl,
With flushing cheeks and tender eyes, she stands
Holding the blossoms, fresh and fair and warm
From love's caressing hands.

And lo! upon the air, love's dear words fall,
Through weary years they linger with me yet—
"To heart as pure I bring earth's purest flowers
My own heart's violet."

The visions fade, the ghostly fleet steal on;
The clouds hang low, the wailing winds make
I hear the stillness of the silent air
In which I sit alone.

And yet, oh faithless heart! not lonely quite,
For, though of faith and joy and gladness shorn,
Out of the bitter depths of pain and loss
Life's truest friends are born.

And still the blessed fragrance fills the room,
And through the tears with which my eyes are
I bless the tender heart from which you came,
My April violet.

Formation of Character.

(WRITTEN FOR THE WATCHMAN.)

Character, like the ocean, is ever changing. It is never exactly the same. It is constantly losing or adding something to itself. It may be losing its worse qualities and assuming the better, or it may be losing the better qualities and assuming the worse. The change may be slight, almost imperceptible, but it never stops. Every action and thought leaves its impress for good or evil upon mind, character, and upon our faces.

What a wonderful revelation of character is the face or eye? A person's character becomes graven upon the face in lines which are very plain to read. It is not so much the shape of the face as it is the expression which betrays us. The eye, that "window of the soul," sometimes tells what we try to hide by our society masks. And the voice is another tale-bearer. Beware of the eye which cannot meet yours steadily without an impudent stare, and of a squeaky, whining voice, and an unusually smooth tongue. Although it may sometimes be harsh, a clear-cut or deep voice is always to be chosen. It may not be melodious, but it is true. [We doubt whether the natural quality of the voice can be taken at all as an index of character, but often something in the manner of using the voice may be significant.—EDS.]

Sometimes events occur which change a person's character or incline it in a different direction. We need most conscientious effort in training and forming character. The people are becoming more generally aware of this fact, and are making efforts in this direction. But there are as yet too many who are not aware of its importance or who do not like to spend the time. Time is valuable, but character is more so. The most valuable time is that spent for this purpose. It transcends all other uses for which it can be employed.

We should be constantly on guard ourselves. The perfection of our own character will temper our success in molding that of others. If we are not successful in controlling others, instead of blaming them we should condemn ourselves. Be kind and gentle, but firm and vigilant. Never request or require another to do anything unless it is right.

Many a parent grieves over some wayward child whom they cannot control; but not many of these parents try, by thoughtful and persistent means, to control their child. In the first place, how did they lose their control? They blame the child when they were themselves the first to blame. The ways of losing it are many, but those of regaining it very few.

Much has been written on this subject, but I hope what is written will be worthy of attention. I have seen so much of this neglect, and so many faults, that whenever I see a child surrounded by such influences it seems almost impossible to keep from lecturing the culprit. I will give a few suggestions which I have successfully applied at home, in the school-room and in society, hoping they may be useful to some discouraged but earnest mother.

Character formation begins very early in life, earlier than we are sometimes aware. In the little child are found all the essential elements of all kinds of character. All children are alike in this matter, though some may have more of one element than of the others. It is the influences brought to bear upon these elements which produce the character. How careful we should be, then, to develop the good and repress the evil! We should encourage every good, noble action, and condemn that which is wrong. But in every case always give a reason for the right and the wrong, and, most important of all, never condemn an action without telling how to do better next time. This is one of the most neglected and most important things in the training of children. It does no good to tell a child that his actions are wrong unless he is told how to better them. If no reason is given for the correction, and if he does not know of any, he will resent the correction as an interference, and will continue doing as he did before unless compelled to change. We are too apt to condemn the actions of children without telling them why or how they should do differently.

One of the most grievous faults is that of saying, in the presence of children, that they cannot be made to obey. Can any one reasonably expect that a child will not take advantage of any one who says this? Can they have as much respect for them or their commands? I think not. I have heard this expression, and similar ones, used so much by parents, in the hearing of their little ones, that I have been led to wonder that the children would ever even try to please or obey. Such children will invariably take advantage every time it is possible to do so. Children have very keen perceptions of right and wrong, and can tell quickly when placed under the care of a stranger which is to be master of the situation.

How many a parent tells the child to do something, and because the child refuses to, does the work himself? In a short time the child pays no heed to what is said, knowing that he will not be forced to do it, and that all his punishment will be a few hasty, angry words, for which he does not care. As he grows older, he will regard the commands and angry words with contempt.

Sometimes if the parents are worried or hurried, the refusal of the child angers them, and they punish the child severely. Perhaps the request is not as urgent or important as at other times, and the child only did as he was in the habit of doing. But it is the refusal that angers the parent. The punishment which follows is cruelly unjust, and rouses the angry feelings of the child. The child is conscious of the injustice and wrong, and retaliates by being worse next time. If the child retaliates in words, the parent punishes or scolds him again for his impudence as they term it. I do not think it should be considered impudent. To a candid, sensible parent, it ought to be a just rebuke for an unjust action. Some parents regret their hasty words immediately after they are said, and try, by talking and coaxing, to smooth things over. But a child's remembrance of wrong inflicted is most keen, and the angry feelings are not easily quieted. If they are not successful in quieting their crying, and in restoring them to a good humor, then they accuse them of being cross. Many a time I have heard this accusation indignantly denied by children, and their denial was just. Children under such care are indeed to be pitied.

Never tell a child to do a thing without saying that he does it. If he refuses or says "I won't," then it is your duty to tell him he must, and make him do it, and see that it is well done. Make no compromises, and accept no trifling excuses.

Every observing teacher can tell what the ruling element is in the homes of the different pupils without ever visiting them. Whether it be love, peace and justice; or discord, fault-finding, injustice, and, in some cases, hate. They may not be able to tell all the characteristics, but they can judge of the general state of the household.

Exact in everything, implicit obedience. Interest yourselves in their trials and pleasures. Secure their confidence and respect and they will not trouble you so much by disobedience. It is the slipshod, grumbling, slow, bungling way in which we allow them to do their work and give their answers which is doing so much harm. They are now forming the habits of a life time and we cannot be too careful.

Let politeness and kindness be a part of their earliest education. There are so many snares surrounding the little ones while they are growing up to manhood and womanhood, that their guardians, whether parents or teachers, should redouble their efforts in improving them with the means of resistance. As soon as they are able to understand and to reason, we should teach them what is right and what is wrong, and why, and what the consequences are. Do not wait until they in their ignorance have committed some wrong, and then rebuke or punish them. It is unjust, for many times no wrong is intended, and the results are different from what they intended. It is ignorance and not the child that should be punished. And this punishment is a knowledge of what is right. Ignorance is the worst enemy of character and knowledge its best friend. I do not mean book knowledge, but a knowledge of right and wrong of all kinds at all places and at all times. Teach them to despise the wrong and love the right.

MISS BERTHA VON HILLEBRAND and Miss Maria Beckett have exhibited their new pictures at Earle's galleries. The exhibition includes twenty-one paintings. Among them is a forest interior by Miss Von Hillebrand, entitled "Saint Genoveva and Count Siegfried." Miss Beckett also has a picture on another incident in the same story, and her "Medley of a Dream after Reading Ovid" is a striking work.

To An Absent Mother.

(WRITTEN BY VITAL E. BANGS.)

Oh! why should busy hands be still While idle ones disport at will?
Why should the laden hands be stayed
Whose aim was to relieve, and laid
By death so rudely on the breast?
For rest, for needed rest.

Oh! why should wisdom be consigned
To earth, when all of life's resigned?
That we, who loved its voice to hear,
May take its broken chapters dear
Into review, and learn to heed
The lessons that we need.

Why should the voice be made so still
That gave expression to good-will
When others harshly seemed to chide?
That—silent on earth's busy tide—
Its echoes from the loving heart
May nevermore depart.

Why should the feet that only trod
In duty's way—on sainted sod,
Be bound by death's unyielding chain?
'Tis that the task may not be vain
Of tracing on the sunlit sand,
Footprints to th' other strand.

Why has sad death so late revealed
The angel that was half concealed
In one that passed to th' other shore?
That we may know that one before
Is pilot o'er the icy way
To an eternal May.

'Tis vain—philosophy in vain
Assays to lessen heartfelt pain.
Give back, O death, the faded form,
The ruddy cheek, the pulses warm;
And give the loved a chance to see
The void her absence left in me!

About Hands

(WRITTEN BY I. H.)

It is not of a necessity that the average housekeeper should display a coarse, red, unkept hand. I say unkept because the hand can be cared for just as one cares for the hair, which may be a crown of beauty or a positive disgrace. To be sure, very many have no time to stop to think about the hands, but then if one is so disposed she can think without stopping. Wash-day is hard on the hands, but one need not sit down and read to know that it is an evil thing to plunge the hands into hot water from cold, or into cold water from hot. It wears and shocks the system as well as reddens the hands. The simple expedient of warming the rinse water will have a remunerative effect in preserving the hands. The hands should be dried thoroughly always before going to hang out the clothes. It will save much cold cream, besides the annoyance. Many who wish to take particular care of the hands put on gloves when they go to put out the wash, using for this purpose light colored kids that have been discarded for dress purposes. If you do not wish to do this, draw on the gloves after the washing is over, after warming the hands and rubbing them with some kind of an emollient. After the gloves are kept on for an hour or so the hands will appear soft and warm and healed of their soreness.

If the same thing is done after dish-washing in the morning, and the sweeping done while the gloves are on, the ensuing comfort and luxury would repay all trouble. There is no emollient as satisfactory as druggist's "cold cream." It is pleasant to the touch and smell, and is absorbed immediately by the skin. It is not necessary to sleep in gloves to have nice hands, only they should be protected while walking or driving.

It is a woman's duty to take care of her hands, if only for the comfort of the sick who may be under her care. The touch of a smooth, warm hand is quickly noticed by a restless sufferer. And, although in a sick room it is first and most important that the hands should be deft and willing, yet if they be soft and white it will be a satisfaction to the attendant and a luxury to the patient.

Contra Costa Co., Cal.

YEARS ago, a family of four—a father, a mother and two sons—dwelt in a small house situated in the roughest locality of the rocky town of Ashford, Connecticut. The family was very poor. A few acres of stony land, a dozen sheep, and one cow supported them. The sheep clothed them, and the cow gave milk, and did the work of a horse in plowing and harrowing. Corn bread, milk and bean-porridge was their fare. The father being laid aside by ill health, the burden of supporting the family rested on the mother. She did her work in the house and helped the boys to do theirs on the farm. Once in the dead of winter, one of the boys required a new suit of clothes. There was neither money nor wool on hand. The mother sheared the half-grown fleece from the sheep, and in one week the suit was on the boy. The shorn sheep was protected from the cold by a garment made of braided straw. The family lived four miles from the "meeting-house," yet, every Sunday the mother and her two sons walked to church. One of these sons became the pastor of the church at Franklin, Connecticut, to whom he preached for sixty-one years. Two generations went from that church to make the world better. The other son also became a minister, and then one of the most successful of college presidents. Hundreds of young men were molded by him.

That heroic Christian woman's name was Deborah Nott. She was the mother of Rev. Samuel Nott and of Eliphalet Nott, President of Union College.

What a Child Can Do.

"Pa, I have signed the pledge," said a lit boy to his father, on coming home one evening; "will you help me keep it?"

"Certainly," said the father.

"Well, I have brought a copy of the pledge; will you sign it, papa?"

"Nonsense, nonsense, my child! What could I do when my brother-officers called—the father had been in the army—if I was a teetotaler?"

"But do try, papa."

"Tut, tut! why you are quite a little radical."

"Well, you won't ask me to pass the bottle, papa?"

"You are quite a fanatic, my child; but I promise not to ask you to touch it."

Some weeks after that two officers called in to spend the evening.

"What have you to drink?" said they.

"Have you any more of that prime Scotch ale?"

"No," said he; "I have not, but I shall get some. Here, Willie, run to the store, and tell them to send some bottles up."

The boy stood before his father respectfully, but did not go.

"Come, Willie—why, what's the matter? Come, run along." He went, but came back presently without any bottles.

"Where's the ale, Willie?"

"I asked them for it at the store, and they put it out on the counter, but I could not touch it. O pa, pa! don't be angry. I told them to send it up, but I could not touch it myself!"

The father was deeply moved, and turning to his brother officers he said:

"Gentlemen, do you hear that? You can do as you please. When the ale comes you may drink it, but not another drop shall be drank in my house, and not another drop shall pass my lips. Willie, have you your temperance pledge?"

"O pa! I have."

"Bring it, then."

And the boy was back with it in a moment. The father signed it, and the little fellow clung round his father's neck with delight. The ale came, but not one drank, and the bottles stood on the table untouched.

Children, sign the pledge, and ask your parents to help you keep it. Don't touch the bottle, and try to keep others from touching it.

RAILROADS AS A CIVILIZING AGENT.—Railroads, in addition to their commercial and war values, seem now to be assuming a new phase of usefulness, by being brought into use as an important agent in the work of civilization. Under the stimulus of danger, says an exchange, from the French, China is taking on the appearance of a new nation. It is not many years since a railroad was torn up because the Chinese could see no use for it. When informed that the cars would take them from place to place at the rate of 30 or 40 miles an hour, the stolid answer was made that they did not want to travel at that rate. They had time enough to travel by the old methods of conveyance. So long as the Empire was at peace it could jog along after the old fashion. The prospect of a first-class war has stimulated the Celestial mind to a livelier appreciation of the value of modern inventions. Even the Chinese admit that it may be an advantage to move troops at the rate of 30 miles an hour, though the peaceful population continues to travel by the old conveyances. They comprehend also the advantage of being in instant communication with all parts of the empire when an invading army threatens one part of it. The Chinese are now building telegraph lines to the distant provinces, and, if the pressure of war should pass, we may be sure that the lines will not be destroyed. Railroads are not so easily built, but when progress is admitted in one department of business it communicates its wants to all other departments. If the Chinese could have kept themselves entirely to themselves, they might have lived some centuries longer in the old way, but as they are in the world they must of necessity be part of it.

EFFECT OF GAS ON THE VOICE.—Our English exchanges inform us that Dr. Moffat delivered a lecture lately in Glasgow on voice training by chemical means. Dr. Moffat maintained that the presence of peroxide of hydrogen in the air and dew of Italy had some connection with the beauty of the Italian vocal tone. A series of illustrations by people taken from the audience, who inhaled a chemical compound made to represent Italian air, were largely satisfactory—a full, clear, rich, mellow tone being produced by one application. Several gentlemen present gave their favorable opinion of the new idea. Dr. Moffat's own illustrations were quite unique. Taking what was originally a voice of power and resonance, but destitute of intonation, he showed by chemical means this could become a tenor of great range. Some twenty notes, ranging from the lower to the higher register, were sung without any effort by the possessor of a voice of this character.

The Norman Horses.

The picture which we present on this page, by the splendid French artist, Rosa Bonheur, would portray a scene in sunny California, as well as in sunny France. American importers have paid the French so much money, and have exercised so much judgment in selecting animals, that probably we can show as good a group of Norman horses as could be found in Normandy. Thus the picture of Rosa Bonheur has the more significant bearing. Probably she could find as good material for her sketch in the neighborhood of Petaluma, and at other points, as in her native land.

This great horse has grandly survived the dark ages. By the Norman-French chivalry, he was ridden to glory on every European battle-field of medieval times. Before his thundering charge in the first crusade the Moslem cavalry was driven like chaff before a hurricane. On his back the warriors of Normandy conquered England, controlled France, and long held the whole of Europe in awe. His composition is the epitome of the three most puissant races of his genus, and his proud name has for ages been recognized by all standard literati, and by all English-speaking nations and provinces, as an historic commemoration of the once all-conquering nationality that perfected his form, and bred him, for nearly one hundred years on both sides of the British channel. And now he is known from end to end of the American continent, and is impressing his desirable traits upon the equine stock of the whole country.

A New Food

M. Moride has introduced a new kind of food to the French Academy. It is prepared by working into a pulp raw meat previously deprived of bone and tendon, and then mixing this with bread or farinaceous substances, which absorb the watery constituents of the meat and thus form a paste. This paste is dried in air or a mild stove, and then ground and sifted. The powder is gray or yellowish, according to the material and proportions, and is said to have an agreeable flavor. By mixing this with albumen, fats or gummed water, it is made into cakes or cylinders, to be afterward used for soups, sauces, etc. It will keep for an indefinite length of time when thus prepared, provided it is not moistened. M. Moride affirms that this is more assimilable than cooked meat. He gives it the name of "Nutricine," and proposes, among other applications of his invention, to preserve the refuse of the slaughter houses, the flesh of horses, blood, etc., for the feeding of dogs, pigs, ducks and fowls. In this he is anticipated by the English manufacturers of the "meat biscuits" that have long been used for feeding dogs, fowls, etc.

If the materials could be guaranteed, this mode of combining flour with meat to produce a portable, unchanging, nutritious food, requiring the minimum of cooking, would be of incalculable utility, especially if the act of union of the meat with the farinaceous matter effects an incipient decomposition or loosening of the original bonds of chemical union that renders the compound more easy of digestion and assimilation than were either of the original materials. M. Moride seems to suppose that something of this kind occurs, and there are good analogies in support of such a theory. The soldier, the sailor or the workman away from home, or the clerk or merchant at his office, might thus carry a penny cylinder, which, merely moistened with a little hot water, would include all the material of soup, entree, joint, vegetables, bread and cheese.

A GIRL'S Temperance Club in Belfast has one hundred and twenty-five members. The associate members number one hundred and forty-three, and consist of gentlemen who have been induced to join the club by the young ladies. In speaking to them recently, Miss Tod said—they had to teach the lesson that none of them had a right to live for themselves, and that all of us had a duty to our neighbors. Girls now had cultivated minds, trained intellect, habits of free and intelligent and responsible action, habits of thought and action, not in the power of other girls in former days.

Earthquake Phenomena.

In the last issue of the Popular Science Monthly, M. Daubee has an instructive paper, with the above title, from which we reproduce the following explanations respecting the probable causes of these occurrences:

The causes of earthquakes have long been the subject of many conjectures. The numerous investigations of later years have contributed much to define their characters, and several data recently acquired tend further to make their mechanism clear. It is known that the shocks are by no means distributed haphazard over the surface of the globe. The countries where the strata have preserved their original horizontal position, like the north of France, a part of Belgium, and the most of Russia, are privileged with tranquility. Violent commotions are manifested particularly in regions that have suffered considerable mechanical accidents and have acquired their last relief at a recent epoch, like the region of the Alps, Italy and Sicily. The tracts that are simultaneously disturbed by the same shock most frequently comprise arcs from 5° to 15°, or from 300 to 1,500 kilometers. They rarely include a much more considerable fraction of the globe, although the celebrated catastrophe at Lisbon on the first of November, 1755, extended over some 17° or 18°, into Africa and the two Americas, or over a surface equal to about four times that of Europe.

High Art Newly Applied.

Written by LUCY LYNSWOOD.

"Oh, mamma, I've torn my new pants awfully! I am so sorry! I couldn't help it. I was just getting the prettiest bird's nest you ever saw to bring it home for you, when I slipped and fell and tore this dreadful tear."

We were sitting in my friend's cosy studio, chatting together, whilst I watched all sorts of lovely things growing out from under the tips of her skillful brushes upon the plaques he was painting. First there would be a little pat of color, then a nebulous shape, which, by a few telling strokes of the brush, would be transformed into a bee or butterfly, a bud or blossom, just as the fancy of the artist dictated. The door was thrown open and Harry bounded in with his curly hair all rumpled, his handsome clothes in disorder, and his fair face in need of soap and water, whilst he blurted out the story of the mishap which had befallen him, not seeing in the excitement of the moment that his mother had visitors, until he turned to exhibit the great square snag, which had been torn clear out of the seat of his jaunty little suit.

Suddenly he espied me, when, clapping his hand over the hole in his pants, he retreated in dismay, with a hurried, "Oh! I didn't know mamma had company."

My friend and I could not but laugh at the that unless one had been looking for it, they would never have discovered its presence.

"So you did find the cloth to match Harry's suit, after all," I said, as the child left the room.

"No! I did not," returned the artist mother, with a smile. "I sought for it over the whole city, but there was nothing like it in town."

"Why—I thought—" I commenced—"O! I see! you bought him another suit just like it."

"Wrong again!" laughed my friend. "But isn't it a clever match?"

"Perfect!" I answered. "I should never have suspected even the presence of a patch, if I had not seen the need of one, on my last visit," and we both laughed again as we remembered Harry's dismay at having exhibited his rents before visitors, and his headlong retreat from the room. "But I do not understand it. You say you could not match the cloth, and yet the tare is mended—and that, too, so finely that one can scarce discover that it has been torn. How is that?" I asked.

"It should be a professional secret, I suppose, and Harry would be greatly mortified to know I had revealed it; but I don't mind telling you. It is not the cloth you see; it is only a picture of it. High art applied to base uses! Do pardon so base a pun," laughed the artist. "But it was the only possible way to mend that great hole in the seat of his new pants, and I had to do it, you see."

"Excuse me; I must seem very stupid, but I don't yet understand."

"Don't you see," she explained; "when I found I could get no cloth in the city at all like that I wanted, I got some dark, rich green the color of the ground-work or 'background,' to speak artistically—and she laughed. "Then with this cunning brush, whose 'witchery' you have so often admired, I simply imitated every splash, dash and line of color in Harry's suit, upon the plain green cloth. In fact, I 'copied' it more faithfully than I have done any other picture for a long time. The result, you see, is that Harry's pride and my purse are both spared a strain, and nobody's the wiser save ourselves."

"Now, that's what I call genius!" I exclaimed, in honest admiration of her cleverness. "Anybody can paint a picture in these days, but not everyone has the wit to apply their art so effectively to home uses. As I said once before, Harry's patches may help him to become President of the United States some day, but it will not be on account of them alone, but because he has inherited the wit and genius of his mother, who knows how to make even patches artistic."

THE USE OF MILK.—The consumption of milk is very much less than it might and should be. One quart of milk contains quite as much nutriment as one pound of average beef, and costs half as much money. Farmers use comparatively little milk, and much less than they could very profitably. Milk and crackers or bread—when it is sweet—make a most wholesome and nutritious food, and if used regularly for one meal every day would be found far more desirable and satisfactory than any other food. The average consumption of a family who purchase their milk is not more than one pint per day, and the majority of farmers use milk only in tea and coffee and rarely as food. Two or three quarts of milk a day might be used in every family with great benefit and economy. With crackers, bread, rice, sago or tapioca, it makes the most delicious puddings, and when sipped slowly while one is eating a cracker or a biscuit it makes a light supper, which will encourage restful sleep at all seasons, but especially in the warm weather.—New York Times.

THE PHILADELPHIA INTERNATIONAL ELECTRICAL EXHIBITION OF 1884.—This exhibition, to be held under the auspices of the Franklin Institute, will open September 2d, and close October 11th. Under a joint resolution of Congress, articles from abroad, imported solely for exhibition, may be entered free of duty. Exhibitors must pay an entrance fee of $5, and from ten to twenty cents per square foot for space. Exhibits will be classified as follows: Production of Electricity; Electric Conductors; Measurements; Applications of Electricity—1. Currents of low power—2. Currents of high power; Terrestrial Physics; Educational and Biographical. The exhibition building is the corner of Thirty-second street and Lancaster avenue, and will be opened for the reception of goods from August 11th to August 30th.

shocks as well as the contours of the disturbed areas. From the manner in which the latter surfaces agree with the lines of pre-existing dislocations, several of the most distinguished geologists, including Mr. Dana, M. Suess and Albert Heim, have considered the shocks in question as connected with the formation of chains of mountains, of which they may be a kind of has enabled us to determine the center of the continuation.

In fact, the crust of the earth everywhere shows the enormous effects exercised by the lateral pressures that have been in operation at all epochs. The strata, bent and bent over again many times through thousands of meters of thickness, as well as the great fractures that traverse them, are the eloquent witnesses of these mechanical actions. Notwithstanding the apparent tranquility now reigning on the surface of the globe, equilibrium does not exist in the earth, and commotions have not been arrested in its depths. The proof of this is found, not only in earthquakes, but also in the slow movements of the soil, of elevation and depression—a kind of warping, which has continued to manifest itself within historical times in all parts of the globe.

SUGAR IN TOBACCO.—That tobacco, as ordinarily prepared by some of the manufacturers, is frequently sweetened with molasses, honey, licorice, etc., is not doubted, but we think it will be a surprise to most people to learn that a considerable percentage of sugar is a natural constituent of tobacco. Yet such has been demonstrated to be the fact by Prof. Atfield, F. R. S. Eight samples were obtained from planters in different parts of Virginia, Kentucky and North Carolina, which gave, to 100 parts of leaf, from 5.57 to 9.60 parts of tobacco sugar, and from 8.23 to 12.80 parts of total saccharoid matter. In tobacco grown in unfavorable conditions, or without sufficient heat, the amount of sugar is often but a mere trace, while for light colored or bright Virginia leaf it will average about ten per cent.

"It is really too bad!" she said at last, a look of genuine distress clouding her fair face. "He is just the most thoughtless boy in Christendom. I let him wear his new suit to-day to his little cousin's birthday party—and there's the end of it! It is such an odd cloth, with its splashes of red and yellow upon the dark green ground, that I can never match it in the world, and to patch it with any other goods would show so conspicuously that I haven't the heart to do it. I'll declare, it is just too provoking! He had promised to be so careful of it if I let him wear it to day—and now the suit is completely ruined!"

"Accidents will happen," you know, I quoted, by way of consolation. "And it was his love for you that caused him to risk the bruises that she hadn't kissed." "Yes, I know all that," she replied, reluctantly. "But the trouble is that I really cannot afford to buy him another suit this spring, and though it will pain me far more than it will punish him, to see his suit ruined by a mismatched patch, I suppose I shall have to endure it. I really see no other way out of the difficulty."

I comforted her by reminding her that "boys would be boys," and that a lad so bright and jolly as her Harry was superior to patches and all the more likely to become president of the United States some day, on account of having earned the patches gloriously in his youth, and shortly afterwards I took my leave.

In a little run down into the country, a few weeks after this, I found some autumn leaves, so beautiful that I took them around to my friend, upon my return, so that she might transfer their beauty to canvas for me.

Whilst I was there Harry came into the studio for a moment, wearing the same jaunty little suit in which I had seen him before. Instinctively I looked for the patch or rent, but if rent there had been, there were certainly no traces of it now. The patch, if there was one, had been put in so skillfully, and the cloth was so exactly a match,

District Meeting of No. 5 and Presentation.

Deputy Carroll closed his official duties in a grand district meeting in Hamilton hall, the Lodge room of Hercules, No. 53. There was a large attendance, and a very enjoyable meeting. Part of the work of the evening was conferring the M. W. degree on one candidate. The next was making a loan of $50 to a widow of one of their late brothers. Brother A. H. Cummins, of Olympic, was then called upon for a few remarks, which were general, eloquent and specific. The most interesting and specific portion was reviewing the services of Deputy Carroll and presenting him with a service of fine cutlery and silver spoons, large and small. Engraved on each one is his monogram, and on the large box are the words, "Presented to Chas. E. Carroll, D. D. G. M. W., of District No. 5, by the members thereof." At the close of Brother Cummins' remarks, which are herewith given, Deputy Carroll undertook to reply, but he said as his heart had suddenly got in the wrong place, he would only return his sincere thanks. Brother Frank Blum, of Franklin, the musical genius of our city, then entertained the company in various ways, even to playing tunes on old oyster cans. An adjournment was then made to the banquet room, where three long tables were in order for a collation. After the cigars had been passed, speeches were made by E. F. Loud, Deputy Grand Master, E. Danforth, G. O., R. H. Witherill, Grand Representative from San Buenaventura, Geo. W. Lemont, I. W. McKay, Harry J. Lask, and an original poem by Sam Booth, our poet, on the career of our San Francisco District Deputies, which was a fine hit. At a late hour the happy company gave to each other heartfelt good-byes. This was a happy and successful meeting, and a fitting closing to the prosperous District No. 5.

The following were the remarks of Brother Adley H. Cummins when called upon by M. W. Miller, for a special purpose, i. e., the presentation:

My remarks will be, first, general; then specific, and the relevancy between the two will be apparent to you before I close. First—As an Order we are attempting to grapple with the greatest problem that has ever engaged the attention of man. It is a problem as old as the duration here upon earth of the human race; it is the gigantic problem of life and death—of life and livelihood for our loved ones after we are gone; of a peaceful death for us who feel that though we must leave them they shall not come to want. In the Yosemite valley, near the Bridal Veil Fall, is the grave of a little girl. It seems a strange place for the angel of death to pursue his conquests, and a lone-some one to be buried in, almost under the icy spray of the eternal Pohono. No child of our race reposes in a sepulcher so majestic, so awful in its surroundings, with the Bridal Veil waving above it, and the water pouring down like volleys of supernatural artillery—but even there, over that valley, as over the crowded city, the fierce Spirit of the Scythe and Glass has swept, and naught could stay his rushing pinion.

"The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this unsubstantial pageant fading,
Leave not a rack behind; we are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep."

But we think that we sleep well if those who are dependent upon us are provided for after our decease. It is, then, because of love for our homes that we have built these altars and erected these temples, and it is an encouraging sign in the midst of so much laxness as we observe in the social state that such mighty Orders as this give indications of the fact that there is still a wonderful love for that sacred spot called home, in the hearts of our people. Upon this basis and foundation is constructed the superstructure of our civilization—of our liberties, and well shall it be for the nation so long as that foundation is safe. There are many touching incidents told in history of the love of people for their homes; one only will I repeat. Was there ever a time when music so seemed to be the voice of God as at the siege of Lucknow, when the British forces were hemmed in by the furious natives? It was the last day in the fort; they knew it was the last. The enemy's lines were creeping nearer and nearer, while all within was horror and despair, when, all at once, a radiant gladness came over the face of that Scotch lass as she exclaimed: "The Highlanders! Oh! Dinna ye hear the slogan far awa?" Then, through the rattling fire was heard "The Campbells are comin'." It was the pipes of the Highlanders, and then they set to playing "Auld Lang Syne." Oh, Music! Maid Divine! mighty are thy triumphs, glorious thy career, but never had thy minstrelsy such eloquence as when those soldiers' voices were broken with tears and the Highland pipers were playing "Auld Lang Syne," for it recalled to all who were there the heather and thistles upon the hills of bonny Scotland.

Second—The remarks which have been made, have been for the purpose of getting on the blind side of a certain officer here. You remember that fable of Aesop's—of a deer which had a blind eye, and for safety in grazing kept that side continually turned towards a lake around which it browsed, but one day a hunter fetched a compass around upon the lake and shot it from that side, when it exclaimed, "Alas! that my wound should have come from the side whence I least expected it." Thus I think it will be with the gentleman referred to when his name is called.

Now, in all Orders there must be some who bear rule and others who are under authority. We of the generality are none the less active because not placed in position of power, being like those daughters of Milton of whom it was said, "They also serve who stand and wait." To hold position with us involves much sacrifice. One's evenings must be given up and the comforts of home in a great measure lost. But efforts made for the benefit of others and sacrifices thus endured, are not destined to be lost. They are seeds that spring up to an abundant harvest. It is said of the aloe, that strange plant of our own sunny clime, that by the slow and patient growth of a hundred years it reaches its blooming time, when a wondrous bud at its crown bursts into a thousand flowers, but the plant to the flowers is a sacrifice, for in blooming it dies. Yet every one of those flowers is an infant plant, which, as it falls to the ground, takes root and grows, and thus the plant lives again a thousand fold in the young that spring from its dying stem. Thus fruitful are deeds of beneficence and kindness done to one's fellow man; they spring to life and grow again. Now, Brother Carroll, faithful friend and efficient officer, I take sincere pleasure in presenting to you by the hand of the brother who stands at my right (Brother Rattenberry), on behalf of the Lodges composing District No. 5, a set of silver which it seems the committee with peculiar appropriateness has selected for the purpose of presentation to you in recognition of your efficiency and faithfulness in the position which you have held, because its use may be shared in by the faithful wife who has this long time been deprived of your society and of your evenings at home. Long, long may it be, my friend, before, by the pale light of the moon, the fairies shall come and dance upon your new made grave. Long years may you live with your wife to partake of good cheer from the service here presented, and to enjoy comfort and happiness in that Eden-spot called "home."

Golden Gate, No. 8

A very pleasant meeting was held in Protection Hall, Shields' Building, during the session of the Grand Lodge. There was a goodly number of members of the Grand Lodge and a sort of review was in order, and congratulations on the successful session of the Grand Lodge, and the efficient staff elected to the several positions. E. Danforth, G. O.; Seneca Davis, G. G.; Brother Witherill, of San Buenaventura; Brother Thomas Murray, D. D. G. M. W., and others made speeches and gave music that whiled away a very enjoyable evening. Brother Jensen as M. W. presided in that happy and genial manner that made all feel at ease. Brother Witherill made a happy hit calling attention to the fact that two of our chief officers were Spartans and that through the Golden Gate they would achieve new conquests.

Grand Reception of Valley, No. 30.

On Wednesday evening, the 2d inst., one of the great events in our Order was celebrated in the Mechanics' Pavilion. The occasion was to celebrate the fact that Valley had attained over 1,000 members, and to give a reception to the Grand Lodge which was then in session in San Francisco. It was the conception of the able and experienced committee, seconded by the members, to give a free, royal and generous reception to the A. O. U. W. by invitation. The mammoth hall was tastefully decorated, and over the large platform, suspended in golden letters, were these words: "Valley, No. 30, A. O. U. W., 1,000 Welcomes." At 9 o'clock the Grand Lodge, 300 strong, marched over the floor to the music of a march by the band, and took seats on the stage. A company of over 6,000 were then welcomed by Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. W., and member of Valley, No. 30, in a laconic and witty speech. Jas. T. Rogers, G. M. W., briefly answered. The grand march was then formed, led by E. Haquette and wife, of Valley, and it was estimated that there were 500 couples in the grand march. The remainder of the evening was happily whiled away as suited the desires of this vast company. A majority held to the terpsichorean exercises, while the balance strolled around through the gardens or feasted at the well-laden tables under the supervision of Joseph Giusti, the caterer for the occasion. It was long after midnight before the medley warned the revellers that the festivities were over. The party will be long remembered as the most successful of its kind that has ever been given in this city. The following gentlemen served on the committees: Committee of Arrangements—Daniel McLeod, W. B. Lyon, W. H. Barnes, E. F. Loud, W. G. Buchanan, William Patterson, T. H. Macdonald, W. Broderick, C. Waller, J. Giusti, James M. Camp. Reception Committee—C. W. Decker, J. H. Grady, D. S. Weaver, James Simpson, C. C. Terrill, B. J. Watson, J. J. Hayes, B. A. Ingell, H. S. Dearborn, P. Crowley, H. Huber, H. H. Pearson, John Elder, S. Zemansky, A. Newman. Floor Manager—E. Haquette. Floor Committee—F. Vaughn, B. F. Louis, A. Badlam, E. W. Blaney, W. F. Norcross, T. Percy Pease, G. F. Reeve, Jr., John Thompson, W. H. Porter, C. E. Hunt, G. C. Smart, J. S. Swan, B. E. Henriksen, H. H. Creighton, James Connor, K. Winter, J. W. McCarthy, F. P. Latson, A. A. Burton, J. P. Babcock, R. L. Cockrill, J. H. Applegate, Jr., B. F. Wellington, George A. Tripp.

Olympic, No. 127.

On Tuesday evening, the 1st inst., Olympic received fraternal visits from Unity, No. 27, and Triumph, No. 180. There were also present a large number of the members of the Grand Lodge. Remarks were made by Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M., William H. Jordan, P. G. M., Grand Master Rogers and others. It was an evening that will long be remembered by the visitors.

Lily of the Valley, No. 11, D. of H.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Another flower has to-night been added to our bouquet of entertainments—of course it was a lily, for before "the lilies" bloomed we had no such entertainments to speak of, for some years at least. It begins to run smoother as we become more accustomed to it. Just for a joke and also to prevent the men from getting jealous, a man was selected to act as Master of Ceremonies, and the selection fell upon Judge J. W. Henry, who in the excess of his gallantry (the Judge is a great favorite with the ladies), did his best to show how much better the ladies can do such things than the men. Although furnished with a programme, he would persist in introducing vocalists as pianists and vice versa, and then make matters worse by explaining how he came to do it "you know." But in the opening address, which fell to his lot, he did well even for him, and few excel him in happy hits. Mr. J. T. Farley recited a sentimental poem, the latter portion of which affected many to tears. The old favorites, Miss Gertie Gerrish and Miss Eliza Wittenbrock followed with a well selected and finely executed piano duet. Mr. Mann, a new comer here, but a valuable acquisition to Sacramento's corps of fine tenor singers, was introduced and sang "It was a Dream," to the satisfaction of all present; responding to an encore with "The Kerry Dance." Prof. Ball gave a fine exhibition of instrumental acquisitions on the piano, playing "The Blue Bells of Scotland" with all its variations. Mrs. J. W. Guthrie, to whom our Order owes many debts of gratitude for past favors, favored the audience with "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," but she did sing them and all would like to hear her sing them again. Mr. E. F. Ashworth rendered a vocal solo so well that another of the same kind was called for and given. A vigorous attempt to extort a third, failed. The prima donna of the evening, Miss Addie Carter, closed the literary exercises with a vocal solo, and responded to a prolonged and irresistible encore. Judge Henry now tried to astonish the audience by stating that the three Lodges of Sacramento would have a picnic at Woodland, May 1st, but as most of them knew it before and had their girls engaged (or some other fellow's girls), they did not astonish worth a cent, but began rushing around trying to find somebody's wife to dance with, sometimes even taking their own, if they had any. I have always noticed this is for the first dance only; after that they look for the girls, leaving the matrons to look out for the supper, which on this occasion, as usual, was abundant, good and substantial. Everybody was satisfied and again hurraed for "The Lilies." Conspicuous amongst many strange faces was that of Mr. C. D. McDuffie, who was doing his best to see that the WATCHMAN was not forgotten. Hoping you will not forget to come up to the picnic, I remain yours, Sacramento, April 5th. B. MUDDLED.

Mt. Hamilton, No. 43.

Our San Jose correspondent has sent us a lengthy account of a pleasant event occurring in Mt. Hamilton Lodge, but being pressed for space in this issue we are compelled to give instead the following report from the San Jose Herald of March 27th: "Some two hundred members of Mount Hamilton Lodge, No. 43, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and a large number of invited guests met last evening at the hall on First street. The Lodge met in the early part of the evening, and at 8 o'clock the doors of the main hall were thrown open and the hall was soon filled to its utmost capacity. A. C. Bane, Master Workman of the Lodge, called the meeting to order, and the most interesting programme was carried out that has ever been presented in this city. Mr. William B. Hardy in an eloquent speech, presented District Deputy Osterman with a beautiful gold badge. The token came from members of Mount Hamilton, and as Mr. Hardy said; it was to convey to him some idea of 'the high honor and esteem in which he was held by the members of the Order.' Mr. Osterman gracefully responded, kindly thanking the members for their expression of confidence and esteem. Refreshments were then served, after which dancing was kept up until a late hour."

Multnomah, No. 48.

Multnomah, No. 48, of Portland, is increasing its membership greatly. It is the only Lodge in the city that pays sick benefits.

Chehalis Lodge

We learn from the Portland Standard that Grand Master Bradshaw reorganized Chehalis Lodge on the 26th ult. This Lodge has been very unfortunate in its business relations, its first mishap being illegally constituted, and then immediately after its reconstruction being burnt and losing everything. Grand Recorder Newcomb has fitted them out with new supplies, and they are on their feet again.

Lucille, No. 8.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen of the town of Sutro still keep two men searching in the Carson river, below the town, for the body of Jacob Buchler, the blacksmith, who is supposed to have committed suicide several days ago by throwing himself from the bridge into the river. It will be remembered that his tracks were followed to the bridge, where they ended. As Buchler had threatened throwing himself into the river, and he has not been seen since the morning he was tracked to the bridge, there can be little doubt that he drowned himself.—Virginia Enterprise, March 21st.

Abstract of Grand Master Workman's Annual Report.

Gentlemen of the Grand Lodge:—Again, in compliance with the Constitution, has this body assembled. Again has loyalty to friendship gathered us under its banner. Again do the sublime interests of protection call us to legislation and supervision.

In obedience to this principle, the transient and mercurial feelings of pleasure should be toned down by the consciousness that grave duties must have our attention. For do not at least one hundred thousand persons in this State alone look to us for the preservation of their safety? Do not the wives and children of our brotherhood depend upon us to guard, build up, establish, perpetuate and ornament that system, which is like the shield of Jove, a perfect union of strength and beauty? Nay, do not morality and temperance cry to us to give our mite of good will to the advancement of society? For our destiny as an Order is linked with the cause of virtue and sobriety. And still yet, do not the sublime sentiments of patriotism inspire us to lofty and moral action? Because, when our hearts no longer enshrine our country's love, we shall see infidelity to honor on our alters, and the bats of desolation in our temples. For no organization can live long without a practical embodiment of the attributes of morality and patriotism.

It is, then, with the inspiration of such sentiments that we again surround our mystic altar. Nor can it be doubted that your action in this session will fully reflect a wisdom born of experience and dictated by a manly friendship. For a charitable face and an intelligent eye meets me everywhere. In this report of my official acts all the indulgence you can give is craved, save what is due to justice. If errors have been made, let the correction come. No one, who has not had the experience, can tell what a vast number of questions arise for adjudication, nor how many cases come where diplomacy must be used; nor how many matters spring up wherein it is most difficult to find the line of decision, nor how many times contradictory testimony must be analyzed and resolved.

Grand Medical Examiner.

The Grand Lodge, at its last session, created a Board of Past Grand Master Workman, Grand Master Workman, and Grand Foreman, and devolved upon it the duty of appointing a Grand Medical examiner for this jurisdiction. After one or two interviews, and much correspondence, Dr. James Simpson, of Valley Lodge, No. 30, was appointed about May 5th. The decision of this matter raised the question whether a brother not a member of this body could be legally chosen. Our solution was, that a membership herein is not an inflexible condition to the appointment. The old method of approving a Beneficial Certificate was followed till the appointment was made. It is a pleasure to say that Dr. Simpson has brought much nerve and skill to his place, and the results are manifest. The present method is undoubtedly superior to the old. The Grand Lodge may still, to its own advantage, throw some greater restrictions over the Lodge Examiner.

Deputies' Bonds.

On April 6th a circular to the Deputies was issued, duly notifying them of their appointments, and fixing the amount of their bonds at $500. The approval of bonds requires much labor, and often long delay. In fact, the method of requiring a bond of Deputy is considered by many of doubtful policy. Some say, amend the law so the Lodge, as in other cases, shall send its "per capita" direct to the Grand Recorder. No recommendations are made—consider the suggestion.

Circulars.

The following named circulars, all of which were published in the WATCHMAN at the time of their issue, were here included in the report, viz.: On Public Installations, on the Lucky case and on Supreme Lodge Amendments.

Supreme Representatives.

The last Grand Lodge selected as Supreme Representatives, Brothers Jordan and Taylor, and your servant. As I stated at the time of my selection, it turned out that it was impossible for me to go. My regrets at this failure are sincere and sharp, because there are few, if any, fraternal honors so coveted by me as a seat in that body, which is the well-spring of our glory, the goal of every Workman's ambition. But loyalty to a client's interest made my absence imperative. In regard to the Grand Recorder taking my place, I gave my consent, but my judgement was against the Grand Recorder's assuming any responsibility outside of his office. That worthy officer endorsed my views, and hence declined to go. It is a grave misfortune to have vacant seats in the Supreme Lodge. But considering the fact that our laws do not provide any Deputy for the Grand Recorder, or authorize him to appoint one, it must be apparent that grave difficulties might rise and our immense money interests be jeopardized by his absence. The matter is commended to your attention, with the suggestion that the Grand Recorder be empowered to appoint some brother who may legally exercise his functions.

At the time herein named, feeling that rebellion received no sympathy among our veterans, and as declaring the law that has ever been enshrined in our hearts, the following telegram was sent:

UKIAH, CAL., JUNE 5TH, 1883.

To the Supreme Master Workman, Buffalo, N. Y.:

An unwavering loyalty to the sovereignty of the Supreme Lodge is acknowledged by every Workman in California.

J. T. ROGERS, G. M. W.

And almost as if in answer to our sentiment came flashing the response:

BUFFALO, N. Y., JUNE 7TH, 1883.

J. T. Rogers, G. M. W., A. O. U. W., Ukiah, Cal.:

Fish elected Supreme Master this afternoon. Shake for California.

WM. H. JORDAN.

The Office of Supreme Master.

It is needless to say that this Jurisdiction so grandly appreciates the honor of having the Supreme Head in office, that she aspires to, and will ere long, reach that supremacy in numbers which will permit us to say, "Come! follow us to the stars." Nay, more, to that enthusiasm which will leap beyond America, and carry the banner of Charity, Hope and Protection, wherever there is a manly honor to inspire, and a queenly virtue to protect. It may be speculation, but I firmly believe the time will soon come when our Order, with a more dramatic and cultured Ritual, and fired with the memories of our success, will rear her altars wherever Christianity has won its trophies. We are now beyond the realms of experiment, and are on solid ground. Why should there be unknown seas? Does our Fraternity fear the risk? Do not a missionary zeal and morality and temperance, point to where the yellow harvest gleams? Our destiny points to new conquests.

Resignations and Appointments.

The following resignations have been accepted and appointments made:

In a short time after our last session, commissions were duly issued to Henry Vrooman, of No. 7, as Grand Lecturer; to Chas. E. Wilson, of No. 136, as Deputy Grand Master Workman.

May 4th, 1883, J. B. Reddick declined to become the Deputy of Calaveras county, on account of intended absence from the State, and J. S. Washburn, of No. 148, was commissioned May 21, 1883.

In May, C. E. Wilson resigned as Deputy of District No. 5, San Francisco, on account of becoming deputy Grand Master Workman, and Charles E. Carroll, of Hercules, No. 53, was commissioned June 18, 1883.

On June 26, 1883, D. G. Whitney was commissioned as Deputy of San Bernardino county.

After much delay, P. H. Magginn, July 30, 1883, was commissioned a Deputy for District No. 3, in Placer county.

On October 25, 1883, S. A. Wolfe, for lack of time, resigned as Deputy for Sacramento county, and suggested a successor, but no commission was issued, because no bond was presented.

On June 9, 1883, A. H. Sprague declined to become Deputy of Shasta county, and J. M. Gleave was commissioned as such, July 9, 1883.

On June 25, 1883, C. N. Nutting was commissioned as a deputy for Siskiyou county.

On December 21, 1883, R. M. Jones, on account of a change of residence to Chico, resigned as Deputy of Contra Costa county, and G. W. T. Carter, on February 11, 1884, was commissioned to the place.

By reason of being appointed Deputy Grand Master Workman, E. Danforth, on December 20, 1883, resigned as Deputy of District No. 1, San Francisco, and George Jordan, of No. 36, was commissioned therefor.

Fred W. Bell, of No. 111, declined the Deputyship of Humboldt county, and suggested J. H. Kimball for the same, and a commission was duly issued May 22, 1883.

On October 14th, 1883, Henry Vrooman, under pressure of business, resigned as Grand Lecturer, and after mature consideration, on December 26th, 1883, a commission was issued to E. M. Reading, of No. 136, to fill the remainder of the term.

On December 14th, 1883, Chas. E. Wilson, on account of professional duty, resigned as Deputy Grand Master Workman, and on December 29th, a commission was issued for the unexpired term to E. Danforth, of No. 36, and his bond fixed and approved for $1,000.

To each of these brothers my kindest gratitude is due for their zeal and activity. Our relations were warm, and a personal regard for their welfare commended their resignation.

Compiler of Digest.

The last Grand Lodge passed a resolution, directing your servant "to appoint a competent brother to collate, and put into convenient form," a Digest. In the performance of this duty, P. G. M. W. Taylor was selected as combining all the qualifications necessary for the high trust. Soon after his designation and acceptance the Supreme Lodge determined upon a compilation of decisions for the entire Order. Brother Andros was chosen for this work. A communication was addressed to Brother Sackett, and he assured us that Brother Andros was closely engaged in its preparation. There has been vexatious delay, though it is now in the hands of the printer. A conference was had with Brother Taylor, and he approved a postponement. As our proposed California Digest was to be approved by the Grand Master Workman, Grand Foreman and Grand Recorder, before promulgation, a consultation was had by us, and a determination reached to postpone our work, at least until the Supreme Digest was issued. Of course, if the Supreme Digest prove unsatisfactory, then our California work can be prosecuted to a speedy completion. We now ask for your approval, deeming our action was wise under the circumstances.

BROTHERS GRAEBER & BUTTEN have established a first-class pork packing and provision business in the new Crystal market, corner of Market and Jones streets, opposite Seventh. Families and restaurants can select from this well stocked market Eastern and California hams and the best fresh meats in their line daily.

WE take pleasure in calling the attention of all those in need of anything in the harness line, to the advertisement in this issue of Messrs. L. D. Stone & Co., successors to the long established business of R. Stone, Nos. 422, 424 Battery street. This firm carries a large stock of harness, saddles, saddlery hardware, whips, robes, etc., and those in need of anything in their line will do well to call on them.

BRO. M. T. BREWER, P. G. M. W., accepted the position of Manager of the Pacific Fruit Company January 1, 1884. His associates in this company are well known merchants and capitalists. Agencies have been established in all portions of the State, principal Eastern cities and Europe. Brother Brewer has had a long experience in the fruit business as an Eastern shipper and commission merchant.

THE TAILORING PARLORS of Reeve & Staab, will be found on the corner of Kearney and Geary streets, with entrance at No. 10 Geary. We know whereof we speak when we say we can recommend the establishment of brothers Reeve and Staab to the readers and patrons of our paper. Their goods and workmanship recommend them also. The prices they uniformly charge are favorable to all who desire a good fit and desirable goods always.

THE MAGIC WINDOW SCREEN.—The magic window screen, the most perfect thing of the kind we have yet seen, is on exhibition and for sale by W. Little, 128 Geary street. Among its features are durability, neatness and convenience. The screen being made of cloth strongly woven, will not rust or quickly wear out. It can be fitted to any window sash, and, as it winds on rollers fastened in the window frames when the windows are closed, it is out of sight and out of the way, not interfering with the light or with window-blinds of any kind. The patent was perfected Feb. 5, 1884.

BROTHER A. H. ISHAM, formerly manager of the Studebaker Manufacturing Company for the Pacific Coast, has associated himself in a business copartnership with Mr. I. J. Truman, who has been closely identified with agricultural machinery and implements as a manufacturer and importer. Their house at 533 Market St. is now stocked with a line of agricultural goods of the best class, including carriages and the celebrated hollow axle Milburn wagon. This firm have the agency for the McCormick reapers and other leading agricultural implements. They are genial and reliable men, and are always ready to show visitors through their agricultural repository.

A. O. U. W. LODGE DIRECTORY.

Joining a Lodge will find this Directory valuable for reference. It will enable all who visit different places to so time their journey as to enable them to visit the various Lodges in the districts they visit. Let no good brother who can, fail to visit Lodges when possible. Attend as many different Lodges as you can, and you will be paid for so doing every time, brothers.

Cards inserted in this list at the rate of 25 cents per month, payable semi-annually in advance. If errors or omissions are noticed, please write the office direct.

Lost Papers.

If any subscriber fails to receive this paper promptly, after making due inquiries at the Postoffice, he is urgently requested to notify this office by letter, that we may send the missing papers, and, if possible, guard against further irregularities.

Every Member of the A. O. U. W. Should Subscribe for the "Pacific States Watchman."

It is officially recommended by the Order on the Pacific coast.

Splendidly illustrated, reliable and chaste. The WATCHMAN is published semi-monthly—on the 2d and 4th Saturday of each month.

It is one of the best home and family papers on the coast and this feature commends it to all Workmen and all members of their families.

The subscription price is only $2 per year, payable in advance.

It is a worthy representative of the Order, a profitable companion for every member to read and consult, and a friend that each can take pride in recommending to readers everywhere. Its circulation has been of immense benefit to our noble Order and many of its individual members, who read and patronize its many enterprising and sterling issues. All Workmen should lend it a helping voice and hand.

Advertisers will find it one of the best means of reaching a class of readers, including many Workmen and others who are large buyers in the aggregate.

Good Agents are wanted at all times, to whom large commissions will be paid.

SAMPLE copies sent free for circulation and examination with a view of increasing its subscription list.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO., 252 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

To Let for Concerts, Lectures, Etc.

The auditorium of Hamilton (Independent) Church is to let for Lectures, Concerts and Choice Entertainments. It is one of the best auditoriums in Oakland; has a fine organ; is comfortably seated, well lighted and conveniently located. Apply to TAGGART & DINGEE, No. 480 Eighth St., Oakland, Cal.

Music Teaching.

MISS BESSIE VINNICOMBE, teacher of the pianoforte and vocal music, will give instructions at pupil's residence, when desired, and at Brayton Building, 368½ Twelfth St., near Franklin, Oakland, Cal.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be part-takers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO., 252 Market Street, S. F., C.

REMITTANCES to this office should be made by postal order or registered letter, when practicable. Cost of postal order, for $10 or less, 8 cts.; for registered letter, in addition to regular postage (3 cts. per half ounce), 10 cts.

Abstract of Grand Recorder's Annual Report.

To the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., of California:—SIRS AND BROTHERS:—Herewith I have the honor to present my annual report for the fiscal year 1883.

Membership.

We began the year with 15,432 members, and closed with 16,391, showing an addition of 959. The losses by death were 130, and from other causes 581, leaving a net increase of 959.

Rejections.

The rejections for the year aggregate 272 or 14 per cent of all applications. A large proportion of these were made by the Grand Medical Examiner, as will appear by his report. No doubt many have been rejected who ought to have been admitted, and many admitted who ought to have been rejected, but this cannot be wholly avoided. It is next to impossible, however, to exercise more care in this regard than has been done during the term just passed. No one could be more conscientious and faithful in the discharge of his duty than has been our Grand Medical Examiner.

Much diversity of opinion exists as to the construction to be put upon the law enacted by the Supreme Lodge at the last session of that body, governing the reinstatement of members suspended from the Order, and those desiring re-admission on final card. The law is defective in many particulars, and should be substituted by one more comprehensive and explicit. This is a matter of such great and increasing importance that I venture to ask of this Grand Lodge the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That our Representatives to the Supreme Lodge be requested to use their best efforts for the enactment of the following as an amendment to the Supreme Lodge Constitution, to wit:

Strike out Sec. 13, Article VIII, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 13. Any person holding a final card desiring re-admission to the Order, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission to membership by initiation, and shall be subject to all the conditions necessary thereto, except the degrees shall not be re-conferred on the applicant, and he shall be exempt from all proposition and degree fees, but shall pay the usual fee required of members admitted by card, and the fees as required for a new medical examination. He shall also deposit one dollar in the Beneficiary fund.

Any person suspended from the Order by reason of non-payment of assessments for six months after first delinquency thereon, desiring to be reinstated, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission by initiation, and shall be subject to all the requirements necessary thereto, except that the degrees shall not be re-conferred on the applicant, and he shall be exempt from all proposition or degree fees, but shall pay eight dollars as arrearages into the Beneficiary Fund, and into the General Fund any arrearages of dues owing by him to the Lodge up to the date of his suspension from the Order as above set forth, and also the fees as required for a new medical examination. He shall deposit one dollar in the Beneficiary Fund.

Any person suspended from the Order by reason of non-payment of dues for the period of six months or for such other period of delinquency as may be prescribed by law in the jurisdiction in which he was suspended, desiring to be reinstated, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission by initiation, and shall be subject to all the requirements necessary thereto, except that the degrees shall not be re-conferred on the applicant, and he shall be exempt from the payment of all proposition or degree fees, but shall pay the dues for the non-payment of which he was suspended from the Order, also any arrearage of assessments due at the date of such suspension, and the fee required for a new medical examination. He shall deposit one dollar in the Beneficiary Fund.

Any member suspended from the Order for non-payment of both assessments and dues as before specified, desiring to be reinstated, shall be subject to the same conditions and requirements as specified in the foregoing cases of suspension, and entitled to the same exemptions. He shall pay into the Beneficiary Fund as arrearages, eight dollars, and into the General Fund the amount of dues he owed to the Lodge at the date of his suspension from the Order. He shall also pay the required fee for a new medical examination, and deposit one dollar in the Beneficiary Fund.

In all the above cases the reinstated member shall be exempt from any assessment for the month in which reinstatement occurs, but shall be liable on the next succeeding assessment. All beneficiary moneys paid shall be placed in the Beneficiary Fund, to be forwarded as is provided by law, and other moneys shall be placed in the General Fund of the Lodge unless otherwise provided by law in the jurisdiction in which reinstatement occurs.

In case of rejection, the amounts specified in the foregoing shall be returned to the applicant, except the fee for medical examination, which shall not be returned except otherwise provided by law in the jurisdiction where the applicant applies.

The passage of a law like the foregoing, or one substantially the same, it is believed, would be of untold benefit to all concerned, and relieve Lodges and Grand Recorders from a world of doubt and perplexity.

Transfer of Members.

We are receiving many members from other jurisdictions, and, under the decision of the Supreme Lodge in the Pengelly case, a manifest injustice is being worked to this jurisdiction, as we assume at once on the reception of such members all hazard of loss in their behalf, while usually for several months we are not able to assess them. As they cannot be assessed in the jurisdictions from whence they came, they thus for a time escape assessment entirely. Plainly this is wrong, and calls for a speedy remedy. The shortest, and it seems the best way to this end, would be to amend Sec. 8, Article VIII, Supreme Lodge Constitution, by striking out the proviso or exemption clause therein which relieves from assessments such members as did not receive the M. W. degree prior to the date of the death on which an assessment is levied. Practically the provision does not and cannot accomplish its evident intent. It is in direct conflict with the Relief Law, and is the most prolific source of errors and complication of accounts of any on our statute books. Moreover, it is palpably unjust. The protection of the Order is over a member the moment he becomes a Master Workman as fully as if he had been paying assessments for scores of years; and he should at once share in the common burden or be deprived of the common benefit. The suggested change in this provision of our law would nullify the decision in the Pengelly case based thereon, and put to rest any question as to liability on assessments in case of members admitted on Final cards or members reinstated from suspension from the Order for non-payment of assessments or dues. The hope is entertained that this Grand Lodge will give this matter the profound consideration its importance demands.

Losses at Sea.

I had occasion in my last annual report to call attention to the necessity of some instructions to your Grand Recorder in the matter of settlement of losses in case of members who have presumably perished at sea. To delay payment till the law creates presumption of death would be to wait several years. What shall be done in such cases? To wait such time seems to be the only way by which the Grand Recorder can escape personal responsibility, in the absence of some indemnifying legislation by the Grand Lodge.

A Neglected Law.

I am persuaded that many of our Lodges fail to comply with the law passed at the last session of this body requiring monthly inquiry to be made of certain officers as to whether the proper reports have been set forward, and beneficiary moneys paid to the Grand Recorder. This matter is submitted for such action as the Grand Lodge in its wisdom may see fit to take.

Grand Medical Examiner.

For the greater part of the term we have had for the first time in our experience a Grand Medical Examiner, in the person of Dr. James Simpson. No one could fill the position with a more careful and conscientious attention to the duties connected therewith, and few, if any, with better skill and judgment. It is an exacting and perplexing position, for which the prescribed fee is no fair compensation. Then to collect the mere pittance costs, in time, trouble and expense, about all it is worth. It would be a great relief to that officer if a fair salary were established to be paid as other salaries are paid.

Degree of Honor.

Immediately after the adjournment of the last session of the Grand Lodge, I prepared the necessary books and blanks to carry out the provisions of the new Constitution for the Degree of Honor. Some delay occurred, and some valuable time was lost in getting rituals to meet our requirements. When this was accomplished the Lodges were all supplied with them, and also with all other necessary books and blanks. But few members have become beneficial. During the year three new Lodges were organized, and three have ceased to work; several others have not been heard from for many months. Twelve have sent in semi-annual reports, and seem to be in fair condition. I am firmly grounded in the opinion that no more of the Lodges should be organized, except on a beneficiary basis. That is, the majority of the membership should be beneficial, so that a bond of union might all the time exist, after the novelty of a new organization had worn off.

Since the close of the year Bro. Geo. Jordan, Deputy of District No. 1, San Francisco, organized Union Lodge, No. 29, D. of H., under the most favorable auspices, and on the idea of its becoming largely beneficial. If this idea be carried out, we shall then be able to form a more correct conclusion as to the ultimate success or failure of this branch of our Order.

Death Losses.

During the first half of the year our death losses were heavy, but light in the last half. Seventeen assessments were levied; as against nineteen for the year previous. The Death Register attached hereto shows all important facts in relation to these losses. Payments have been made in all cases as promptly as possible, the time averaging about forty days from receipt of proof of death.

Assessment Notices.

The decision of a court in Indiana against the Order in what is known as the "Eaton Case," has awakened the organization to the necessity of providing means by which the serving of assessment notices upon our members as required by law shall be made a matter of record. It is suggested that the matter could be most easily reached by a resolution instructing the Grand Recorder to provide in connection with the blanks known as Recorder's Monthly Reports, another blank to form a part thereof, which the Financier shall sign (the same to be attested by the Recorder under seal of the Lodge), certifying that, in accordance with law, all members in good standing on the first of the month for which report is made were notified of the assessments. Such a system would put the Grand Lodge in possession of official evidence that might be of the first importance in case of litigation.

Pacific States Watchman.

To the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN the Order is largely indebted for the continued growth and prosperity of the Order in this Jurisdiction. Amongst all the able journals of our Order, none can rightfully claim superiority over the WATCHMAN, a fact I believe very generally acknowledged and appreciated by our membership.

Conclusion.

In closing this report I have nothing but kind words to express concerning all our officers and members, and especially of those with whom I have been most closely associated in official relations. To Grand Master Jas. T. Rogers I am under many obligations, for kindnesses shown, and acts and expressions of confidence bestowed.

Faithful, as in the past, so continues our Grand Receiver, Bro. C. H. Haile. Through his honest hands have passed a million of dollars of the Order's money, and not a cent is missing.

Our Finance committee in the persons of E. H. Morgan, Philip Peck and Jas. J. Hayes, have been prompt, efficient and correct, in the discharge of their important duties. Others may do as well—none can do better.

Attached to this will be found a full exhibit of the financial transactions of my office for the fiscal year, and other tables of valuable matter to the order.

Faternally submitted.

H. G. PRATT,
Grand Recorder.

[Attached to this are lengthy financial statements, statistical tables, etc., of value, which have been referred to at length in some cases heretofore, and will receive further attention in other cases hereafter.—EDITORS WATCHMAN.]

RELIEF COMMITTEE PRESENTATION.

On Thursday evening a select company, including several of the Grand Officers, held a meeting in the Relief Committee rooms, Shields' building, and an episode occurred that must have been quite gratifying to the President of the Relief Committee, Harry J. Lask. E. M. Reading, of Fidelity, No. 136, in a few pleasanties in the way of charges, arraigned Harry J. Lask, P. M. W., and in a neat and appropriate speech gave him in behalf of his friends, a fine Waltham gold watch. On one side enameled in the finest style of art by Brother Gus Pohlman are the emblems of our Order and the letters, A. O. U. W.; on the other in the same style is the monogram of Brother Lask. The inscription on the inside is as follows: "Presented to H. J. Lask by his friends, as a mark of esteem and in recognition of his services as President of the General Relief Committee, A. O. U. W., San Francisco, April 3, 1884." Brother Lask was quite demoralized and could only extend his gratitude and thanks.

Among the last bills passed by the Iowa Legislature was one appropriating $1,500 for the education of Kate Shelly, the girl who saved a train from wreck.

The People's Railway Company.

In this day of great enterprises the People's Railway Company has come into prominence as one of the most gigantic undertakings of the age, and promises to work a revolution in our country as a common carrier. The plan of this company is to build, equip, forever own and maintain in its corporate name, "The Peoples' Railway Company of America," a 3-6 gauge railway from "ocean to ocean, and lakes to the gulf." Commencing construction work first in California. Western terminus, San Francisco; eastern, New York and Boston; northern, Chicago; southern, New Orleans, touching such intermediate points as will be found profitable to the system and appreciated by the people. The plan adopted is a popular subscription by the people in monthly installments of $2.50 for a term of two years. This company assure us they "mean business." Its consummation would do more to settle the question of freights and fares than any probable legislation.

Brother E. P. Fish, P. M. W., is the press agent for the Pacific Coast Division.

For simplicity and durability it is the only reliable Gate now in use. No complex machinery about it. By a simple lever it is thrown off the center of gravity, and opens and closes itself by its own weight. A child six years old can open and close it sitting in a buggy.

It is THE GATE when driving a skittish horse or young colt, or when ladies do their own driving. No Fancy Residence should be without them, and every Farmer should have them where there is a Gate used. THE New York underground railroad seems to be fast taking practical shape, and on a much more extensive scale than heretofore contemplated, by adding branches to the main line, which may, in time, be indefinitely continued, as the exigencies of business and population may require. A bill is now pending in the Legislature of New York for laying out a new street under Broadway in New York, at a depth of ten feet or more below the present roadway, in which to construct a railroad. On each side of the railroad will be constructed sidewalks of ten feet in width; and provisions are also to be made for water, sewer, gas and other pipes. Stairways will be constructed leading from the present sidewalks to the underground street at proper distances. It is contemplated to extend the road from the Battery to Harlem river, along the line of Broadway. Branches are to be constructed from Twenty-third street, under Madison avenue, to Forty-second street, and thence north across the Harlem river. Express trains are to be run at a rate of thirty miles an hour, and way trains at fifteen miles. The whole work is to be constructed under the supervision of three commissioners to be appointed by the Governor. The proposed street would form a species of arcade, in which travel would take place, sheltered from the inclemencies of the weather. It is probable that the basements of the buildings fronting on the underground street would be utilized for various purposes. Such an arrangement as that proposed would have advantages over the London underground railways; and it is not seen why it would not be preferable to the present elevated roads in New York.

A DANGEROUS WEED.—Everywhere in Mexico one finds the poisonous weed toloachi, though it grows most thrifty in the tropical lowlands of the tierra caliente. It is a harmless looking plant, much resembling northern milk weed, and quite too dangerously common in a land where suspicion rules and jealousy amounts to madness. It does not kill, but immediately acts upon the brain, producing first violent insanity, and then hopeless idiocy. A few drops of the tasteless fluid, mixed with milk or other food, does the diabolical work with inexorable certainty, and cannot be detected except in its effects. It is whispered that poor Charlotta had hardly landed at Vera Cruz, on her sorrowful mission to this country, before it was administered to her, and her desolate fate is cited as one among many instances.

It is reported that the military post at Fort Lapwai, I. T., is soon to be abandoned. The only posts that will be garrisoned east of the Cascades will be Walla Walla, Camp Spokane and Fort Coeur d'Alene.

REMEMBER*People's Railway Shares of Capital Stock

Are being Offered. 36,000 Bona Fide Subscriptions have been Taken.

A PUBLIC OFFER*INTELLIGENCE OF CALIFORNIA.*All Things Must Have a Beginning.

With this Company a sound and grand start has been, without any public efforts on its part made. This is best evidenced by the subscriptions already taken. There can be no longer doubt to the good faith of the project and the way the people of the Coast have so far quietly placed their shoulders one by one to the wheel, that within 30 days the whole allotment, 120,000 shares, will be taken. It is he who participates in an enterprise at its inception that is recognized to be wise.

Remember that the allotment is 120,000 shares, and that promptness in action will be the means of reaching it.

Remember if this fails to become a people's institution, or its popularity maintained, you will be to blame.

Public Subscriptions—A Public Offer.

An honest and earnest appeal to the people who are willing and will protect themselves by building, owning, operating and maintaining a railroad of their own with an unlimited mileage but limited capital stock $20,000 per mile. This will be found to be the place where money invested will reap its sure reward. The Company guarantees every subscriber who takes of this allotment of stock 10 per cent per annum by selling the stock at 65 and redeeming in transportation at 81.

Remember we are in earnest, and the people are believed to be the same.

The first 300 miles of this road will run through the finest producing counties in the State.

Certificate of Incorporation.

STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. R. Meyers, Secretary of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that the Articles of Incorporation of The People's Railway Company of America were filed in this office July 2, 1883.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Indiana, at the city of Indianapolis, this 2d day of July, A. D. 1883.

W. R. MEYERS, Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 8, 1883.

Emi Kennedy, Esq., President People's Railway Company of America, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Sir: I am in receipt, through reference by the Hon. Acting Secretary of the Interior, of your letter of 31st ultimo, transmitting articles of incorporation and description of organization of the People's Railway Company of America, and am directed to inform you that the same are in proper form and satisfactory to the Department. They are accordingly being placed on file.

Very res. respectfully,
C. M. E. SWEZY, Commissioner.

W. R. MEYERS, Secretary of State.

They say who can speak intelligently: "The railway here claim that there are now enough facilities to meet the want. This is all well enough when they consider a two per cent profit, or more, and make their owners rich. It all comes out of the people, and yet the people are humbled to believe what they say. Facts are stubborn things to contend with."

"The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad is four hundred and forty miles from New York City to Buffalo, and its gross earnings last year were $3,000,000 per mile. I assess it as an asset through this township. I know it divided thirteen millions last year; its pay-roll $500,000 per month; its income twenty-four millions per annum. Your project will be no equally as profitable if managed in the right way." C. J. T., New York.

Sensible Views.

Mr. C. M. E. Schwab, a stockholder, President of the Germania Saving Bank of Jersey City, was approached by a reporter for the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette concerning The People's Railway Company, to whom he said: "The scheme is a good and wise one, and he had no doubt it would be profitable to the investors. The road, he said, would cost $25,000, double track, a mile. Forty-pound steel rail would be used, and the cars would be built cheaper than those in ordinary use, and having the support of the people all along the line, it can not fail to pay. The road was to be built on the INSTALLMENT PLAN."

The People's Railway.

The managers of the above company are taking hold of the work in earnest. They intend to build about 4,000 miles of track. Should this prove successful the Pacific Coast will, in a few years, have a line that will rapidly cut down the prices of freight and travel. Good men are at the head of the company. If good names are a guarantee of good faith, then surely the new company starts with every assurance of success. We wish them well. The time will come, perhaps has come, when common people of the United States will own railroads and telegraph lines. Everything lies in the management of the new company. It should be so arranged that no one or two or half-dozen individuals could obtain a controlling share of the stock. The cheapest and most successful insurance organizations to-day are those formed for mutual benefit and profit, and include a large number of the members. If such organizations will work in one case they will in another. If proper officers are elected, and they act in good faith and to the best interests of the stockholder, there will be no trouble in obtaining all the money that will be required. Butte County (Cal.) Register.

An Interview by a Press Reporter With a Great Railroad Builder Concerning the People's Railway Company of America.

"What do you think Col. Lane, of this stupendous narrow gauge railroad scheme across the Continent, from 'ocean to ocean and from the gulf to the lake'?" "That it is an entirely feasible scheme, and will, doubtless, succeed, as narrow gauge lines can, by paralleling, bankrupt the standard gauges."

"Will you permit me to inquire as to relative cost of standard and narrow gauges?"

"Certainly. I have some experience in the construction and operating of both gauges, and have been an advocate of narrow gauge roads for ten or more years. By actual experience I am enabled to say that the cost of building a narrow gauge road is two-fifths more than the cost of a standard gauge, and this ratio of cost applies as well to the grading, cross-tying and railing. The cost is about according to the respective gauges."

Our Grand Master Workman.

About a year ago we presented our readers with a biographical sketch of our then new Grand Foreman, David McClure. With this issue we present a good portrait and another biographical summary of Brother David McClure, this time advanced to the office of Grand Master Workman. This high honor, conferred without self-seeking on his part, shows the hold he has upon the esteem of the Workmen of this jurisdiction. Recognizing his great power for work, his versatile talents, his gentlemanly bearing toward all he has to do with, they rightly concluded that they could not do better than to elect him to the office for which he was in the line of promotion. In other respects, too, since our last notice he has steadily risen. He has also proved himself to be, aside from his more solid qualities, captivating, popular, and able to hold his friends. As Grand Master Workman, wisdom and discretion may be expected from him. As a Representative in any Grand body he may attend, he will have leading influence, and be found on the right side almost invariably. He is ready and clear in debate, generous to his opponents, and to those less fortunate in worldly goods than himself.

With this general introduction we proceed to rapidly sketch in review the main incidents of his life. Born in Clark county, Illinois, in 1843, of an old Kentucky Whig family, with a remote Scotch ancestry, he received his early education at the Chicago University, a Methodist institution, and emigrated in 1856 to this State with his parents. They settled near Napa city, where they still live on their 320-acre farm—an esteemed and venerable couple.

In his eighteenth year the subject of our sketch took the mining fever and continued in various phases of that business for six years, his peregrinations ranging from the Powder River mines, W. T., to San Antonio, 130 miles from Guaymas, Mexico; and taking in between those points Salmon River, Idaho, New Almaden, Santa Clara Co.; Mariposa, "Old Tuolumne," and White Pine. During that time, besides filling the role of miner, he also acted as pony expressman, news agent, hotel clerk, store clerk, railroad "boss" and mining superintendent. During this career he became a proficient, practical miner, and learned much of value concerning the practical side of life in general.

In 1867 he concluded to study law, and for that purpose entered the law office of Hartson & Burnell, at his old Napa home. In 1869 he was admitted to the bar of the District Court. Not content with this, however, he determined to ground himself more deeply in the principles of legal science, and went to Chicago to perfect himself. In 1871 he graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University, and first entered professional life in that city, having already been admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois. But Mrs. O'Leary's celebrated cow, in kicking over the lamp, also kicked over David's prospects in that city, for the great fire consumed office and library. This misfortune determined him to return to California. Ruined in fortune, but unbroken in spirit, he worked his way back to California and formed a law partnership with Judge Robert Crouch, of Napa. While shows. He was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington in 1882.

Mr. McClure entered political life in 1878, taking an active part therein from the Republican standpoint, and now represents his party in the State Senate, having been elected in 1882 from the Tenth District.

In his social and fraternal life Mr. McClure is most agreeable. March 4, 1876, he married in this city, Miss Emma Folsom, daughter of A. Folsom, of Maine. His wife is a most amiable, bright and accomplished lady, taking great pride in her husband's success, which is in no small part due to her private plaudits and constant encouragement.

HON. DAVID McCLURE, GRAND MASTER A. O. U. W. OF CALIFORNIA.

there he won for the defendants the celebrated case of Stone vs. The Geyser Quick-silver Mining Co., involving rights to over one million dollars worth of property. Judge John Garber, who was associated with Mr. McClure in the case, persuaded him to change the base of his legal operations to San Francisco, where he practiced three years with the firm of Garber & Thornton. This move was the most important and wisest step of his life. In 1878 he formed a partnership with the lamented ex-Congressman, John Coghlan. On the retirement from the bench of Judge Samuel H. Dwinelle, he joined that distinguished gentleman, and the firm of McClure & Dwinelle has since held a conspicuous place at the bar. Mr. McClure's success in criminal cases has led to the popular belief that he makes a specialty of these, but this is a mistake. He is accomplished and equally proficient in all departments of law, as the large civil practice of the firm of McClure & Dwinelle

He was for three years Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of this State; was the first Grand Dictator and a Supreme Lodge Representative for the Knights of Honor of California; is a prominent member and special legal counselor of the Independent Order of Chosen Friends of the Pacific coast, a Companion in the American Legion of Honor, and a Knight Templar in Masonry.

GOOD FOR NEVADA.—A fine list of subscribers for the WATCHMAN has been received from H. Munter, of Candelaria, Nev. Thanks! We shall do our best as heretofore not to disappoint our Nevada friends. To help us in this direction we invite M. Ws., Records and others in Nevada to correspond and otherwise assist us in making the paper serviceable to that jurisdiction.

Fraternity—A California Fern.

WATCHMAN FOR WATCHMAN BY MR. MORGAN MILES, S. O. J. C.

A massive, glittering, endless chain runs deep in the wells of home,
And the breath of the ferns fans the wheel as it turns,
Clanking links of old age, whom it never spurns.
It sips of its nectar from the cup Honor earns,
And the birds snatch the drops as they splash over curls.
While trickling through rocks to the vines where they roam.

Over the mournful, over distress, hover the chanters of Love as they fly,
And a gleam from the stars strikes the golden bars,
Thickly gilt o'er with virtues, erasing all scars,
While the song echoes sweetly where sin often mars;
And the Heavenly chords part the clouds as they fall,
And the Brotherhood joins in the strains till they die.

Unflinching nerve, unlimited strength, march on to the praise of the wife;
And an orphan girl will your banner unfurl,
To wave to and fro in the deafening whirl
Of industry's strife, where is found no churl;
And fond mothers' sons are caught in its fold
As the ranks move on, drawn from harm in life.

Watch and work and list ye all, for the sound of Fraternity's bell
It comforts the sick in their anguish and pain,
And is wafted afar o'er the billowy main
Of poverty's sea; and taps at the door of ill-gotten gain.
And muffles its tones at the graves of the dead,
While the workmen whisper, "All's well; all's well."

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell streets, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.
GRAND MEETINGS AT EXAMINER'S HEADQUARTERS. Office, No. 234 Post street, San Francisco, Cal. JAMES SIMPSON, M. D.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN will be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

LODGES that meet weekly will henceforth elect their officers at the first meeting in May and November, instead of June and December as heretofore. This will give the newly chosen officers time to qualify themselves properly for their duties before time for installation. The change no doubt will be found to work admirably.

BY a change in the constitution, the proposition fee is now placed at two instead of three dollars, and the fee for the Master Workman Degree at six instead of five dollars.

IT IS now probable that we shall not have any new Digest till after the session of the Supreme Lodge in June next.

WE had hoped to send out the published proceedings of the late session of the Grand Lodge before this date, but they are not yet quite ready.

RECORDERS should report suspensions as occurring on the 29th of the month. Suspensions are not by act of the Lodge, but by operation of law, except as a punishment for crime.

DEPUTY GRAND MASTER LOUD has made preparations to make a series of visits to A. O. U. W. Lodges in this jurisdiction. His route is not definitely settled yet.

The Fireside.

Cremation.

(By ELIZA A. PITTSBORO.)

When my spirit escapes its temple of clay,
Is crowned, and ascends to the mansions of God,
When life is enrobed in the garlands of May,
O, bury me not in the mouldering sod!

My sensitive nerves, how they chill at the thought,
And I cry to my mother—my mother, the earth:
O, blessed, dear mother, I pray that my lot,
As I soar and arise to the beautiful birth,
Be not cast with the millions going down in their gloom
Away from the sheen of thy sunlight and bloom!

I spurn and I scorn this custom of old!
Ye races, I cry, if ye love it, 'tis well;
Go down, if ye will, to the mildew and mold,
And the rite of this heathenish carnival swell!
But for me, O, Cremation, thou blessed release, Light thy torch, and this dread of my being appease!

Bring aloes, and myrrh, and sweet frankincense;
In censers of love the aromas prepare
That may please the most subtle, fastidious sense;
And O, my dear friends, my own faithful, be
there,
For my spirit, cognizant, ethereal, made fine,
Enrobed in the garments of glory will shine!

O, space, give me space, an infinite bound,
And give me a process bereft of delay;
Never leaving the light, and with a profound
And deep veneration that finds its own way
Of gilding the gold and refining the clay!
And I cry, O, Eureka, at last it is found—
This process by which it is done in a day!

O, flames most resplendent, sublime purifier!
A beacon 'mid oceans of darkness ye rise!
Ye shall come like a newly-anointed Messiah
To lift up the age from the groove where it lies—

And the temples of earth ever after will shine
With shekinahs and symbols of glory divine!

Then haste with the censor; O, hasten and speed—
A world of fair changes to progress belong.
In its pathway at last it will welcome the creed
That hath chained and o'er-mastered my spirit so long.

O, I scorn and I spurn this custom of old;
I scorn it with scorn that knoweth no bound.
Away with your mildew, away with your mold,
As for me the divine panacea is found!
Bear myrrh to my soul! bea. incense and balm,
And the great purifier of life to my form.

H'ide me not from the stars—they have taught me to soar;
Hide me not from the sun—I have bathed in its beams;

Hide me not from the sea—I have dreamed by its shore,
And have sung 'mid the mountains, the valleys and streams.

O, give me my own; I pray let me rest
'Mid the beauty and bloom by which I am blest!

Purified and wrought fine in Divinity's mold,
On a cloud of sweet incense my spirit would
soar,

Like a bark on the ocean of mist and of gold,
Till it passes the gates of the beautiful shore!

O, beautiful shore, with thy emerald bloom,
In thy realm is no odor of charnel or tomb!

Palm Sunday in Wales.

Probably to a great number of English people the pretty Welsh custom of "flowering the graves" on Palm Sunday is entirely unknown. What the origin of this beautiful custom is we know not. On the Friday and Saturday before Palm Sunday the churchyard presents a busy scene—women washing and scrubbing the tombs and headstones, men trimming the grass and shrubs. When Easter is late, and flowers consequently numerous, the whole churchyard seems as we enter on Palm Sunday to be one mass of blossom and color, and on looking closer we find some really beautiful designs, such as "No cross, no crown," the letters "No" being made in moss, and a cross and crown which had been cut out in cardboard and then covered with primroses. Another which caught my eye was a tomb consisting of a gray stone cross standing on seven or eight steps; each step was covered with moss, and in the moss was placed first a root of maidenhair spleenwort, then a bunch of violets, then a root of maidenhair spleenwort, then a bunch of primroses, and so on around each step, the cross being wreathed with some of the same flowers and ferns. The effect was prettier than can be imagined from my description. Of course this custom has its ludicrous side. For instance, I remember seeing in a country churchyard a child's grave "dressed" for Palm Sunday, the effect of which was certainly more amusing than pleasing. The small grave had coping stones around it, which had been carefully whitewashed, and the grave itself covered with green leaves, while stuck in here and there were bunches of berries that had evidently been dipped into the blue bag; but even this becomes more pathetic than ludicrous when we remember it was done by the loving hand of a sorrowing mother. It is not unusual in Wales at this time of the year for people to travel twenty and thirty miles to flower the graves of their friends and relations.

Our Free Schools and Destroying Evils.

"Mack," the trenchant contributor to the Oakland Tribune, has some vigorous words on the dangers which beset our youth who are attending our public schools, and which should be checked by legislative enactment. We quote as follows:

The common school is only one form of care for the young, and were it possible that all these hundreds of children could be fortunate enough to pass through the Grammar and High School, they would have tasted only one form of good, and by no means the best and most lasting at that, for they may come out with no capacity for trade, no habits of manual labor, no love for shop, store, field or vineyard, and no inwoven principles of truth, honor and integrity. And, in fact, there is a great deal of danger that our fine culture may spoil the pupils for any useful vocation. That our boys are receiving a training exceedingly well fitted for the trade of gentleman, but does not prepare them to grapple with a rough world, and in honest self-reliance make an independent living out of it. That our girls may learn how to chatter French and German, bang a piano, languish over a novel, and, despite love in a cottage, hate domestic duties, and long to glitter in society, until they are wholly unfitted to preside over a home and meet the sterner duties of life; and it is not at all surprising that so many of these ethereally educated creatures mope through life restless and unhappy, and some flutter into the flame and are lost. There is a duty in this matter of education that cannot be wholly intrusted to the family or the church, for the

State Cannot Afford

To wait on the slow and uncertain intellectual and moral development of the fireside and the altar. However salutary the influence of home and the church may be, still there are hundreds of children that have no homes, and thousands that can never be brought under the influence of the church, and if they could, her form of tuition is too slow, uncertain and one-sided, so that it becomes absolutely necessary that the State should go before in caring for the young, as the only effectual way of building up the Nation. And out of this need has come the common school, one of the noblest forms of civilization, and one we can well afford to foster generously without grumbling. And the point we now make and earnestly insist upon, is that the State and city having liberally done all this, are now neglecting to protect the best part of the children's education. It is not enough to furnish a plethoric school fund and commodious, well-appointed buildings, and then allow an enemy to come along and sow tares and weeds in their

Promising Field.

The law should accompany these children on their way to school, and clear all of the brambles out of their path, and chase away all the wild beasts that would devour them. What is needed is not merely learning, but moral worth and character, and therefore they should be guarded from every sense of ill, all foul contact, all evil association and temptation.

What sort of wisdom is it which spreads out books before the children at school, and allows vice in all its alluring forms to publicly spread out snares and traps in their pathway home, that opens the gates of knowledge, and hard by allows it to stand open the flower-wreathed gates of the social hell? That would be flushing the sewers and washing the city clean, and then importing the pestilence. In the old mythologic fancy, describing the labors and sorrows of the infernal world, we find that men of vain and imaginary vision on earth were doomed in hades to pursuits that continually ended in nothing. One man who spent his earth life speaking empty words and making promises he never fulfilled, was doomed to fill a tub with water, the bottom of which was bored full of holes. When we see the schools of our city crowded with eager, expectant children, and the streets all along the way to the school-house hedged

With Gin Mills,

Dives, dens, brothels and the enchanting lusts, we say there is an illustration of our old classic fable. The mistaken citizens are carrying their pailfuls of water to the tub full of holes. These temptations leak out the good as fast as they can pour it in. Another man who had deluded many people on earth by teaching a false philosophy, was doomed in hades to twist a rope out of sweet new grass while a huge ass with an immortal hunger and limitless capacity, ate at one end as fast as he could weave at the other. It may be well for our legislators and City Fathers thoughtfully to ponder over that man's abortive task. What are they doing in these fine looking school houses but twisting the fresh grass of education while temptations to drunkenness, gambling, idleness, vagrancy and all sorts of rapacious vices eat up the fruits of their work.

ELIZA HAWARD POWERS, of Paterson, N. J., who spent a fortune during the war in caring for the wounded, is now an invalid and in needy circumstances. She has asked the Government for $2,500.

Women's Words and Deeds.

MISS NELLIE BATES, of Michigan, won the prize for violin playing at the Cincinnati Conservatory.

MRS. LOUISE GAGE COURTNEY has arranged, as a musical entertainment, Scott's "Lady of the Lake," with readings of parts of the poem. It is most charming as presented by her trained corps of artists.

MISS WITHERS, the daughter of Ex-Senator Withers, of Virginia, can handle a shot-gun with an accuracy of aim exceeding that of many pretentious sportsmen, and makes nothing of bringing down birds upon the wing.

MISS EVA MACKAY, daughter of the bonanza king, is at the head of a society of young ladies who go about doing what good they can among the worthy and deserving poor of Paris. It is a society that has abundant financial capital.

MRS. REBECCA R. POMEROY, who died in Newton, Mass., a few weeks ago, was one of the famous nurses of the war. She has left behind her an interesting volume of personal experiences in the hospitals of the South and as the nurse of Lincoln's son "Tad," when he was sick at the White House.

MRS. MARY A. MILLER is, after all, the registered captain of her own steamboat on the Mississippi river, notwithstanding the gloomy forebodings of the Solicitor of the Treasury. Secretary Folger saw no reason, since her examination showed her to be fully qualified for the service, why she should not receive a master's certificate, and it was given her.

MRS. BREWSTER is spoken of as the queen of the Cabinet circle, Mrs. Logan of the Senatorial, Mrs. Colonel Rockwell, of the army, Mrs. Stanley Matthews of the judicial, and Mrs. Meyers, who presides over W. W. Corcoran's home, of the civil circle of society. These are eminently handsome women. They were beautiful girls in their day, but those who knew them then think them lovelier now.

THE PRESIDENT AMONG CHILDREN. There are only three rooms in the White House now that are not open to the public on reception days. These are the president's private chamber, Mrs. McElroy's room, and little Nellie's chamber. Mr. Arthur has taken great pains in fixing up his little girl's room. It has two large windows that overlook the Potomac and the park in the rear of the White House. Miss Nellie invites her young friends to her room when they come to see her, and there the children enjoy themselves by getting up mock receptions and all manner of games known to young children. Occasionally the president drops in on the children. He is always welcome, but a story is exacted of him by way of toll.

When the president is particularly bored by office-seekers and president-makers he escapes to Nellie's room and forgets his cares in listening to the innocent prattle of the young people. Mr. Arthur has a great fund of stories at his command. Should he tire of political life he could make a fortune as a novelist or story-writer. Miss Nellie's favorite story is the "Gotham Princess." This story has never been copyrighted by Mr. Arthur. It is a bold sarcasm on New York society. It has a good ending, however. The Gotham princess puts all the New York young ladies to shame and marries a Prince Rosebud. Together the prince and princess moor their bark in quiet waters after having passed through many stormy seas. Miss Nellie's room is handsomely furnished. The furniture is blue, with curtains to match. Several pictures adorn the walls. Mrs. McElroy's room is adjoining. Mr. Arthur's room is pronounced by those who have had the good fortune to see it to be a dream.—Pittsburg Commercial.

BRAZIL is about to force the sale of all the property of the monastic orders, except their convents and similar institutions. The bishops and clergy are filling Rio Janeiro papers with their protestations against any sale which is not ratified by the Vatican.

Health Column.

Electrical Medication.

The subject of electric medication is attracting considerable attention at the present time, both from the medical faculty and from the public at large. An edition enlarged and reviewed by Dr. Tipton of Dr. Clark's work upon the subject has recently been issued to meet the increased demand for information in this direction. The author of this work, while not assuming a belligerent attitude toward the other members of the profession, is not afraid to speak out in a manly, independent spirit. He divides all diseases into two classes electrically, "those forms of diseases in which the vital force may be said to be too active, and those in which the vital action is too weak." His "philosophy of disease and cure" is based upon this principle. Yet, while he desires to give full scope to electricity as a remedial agent, he does not ignore the claims of drug therapeutics as an efficient ally, but places them side by side upon an equal footing.

The claims of electricity as a remedial agent was not formerly admitted by the profession, but of late, however, the researches of Dr. Tipton and a few others have placed it in a more favorable light, and many believe that ere another decade has passed the profession generally will acknowledge that in electricity they have found a most important aid to drug therapeutics in controlling most of the ills that flesh is heir to.

Still another new work on electricity in medicine and surgery has recently been made by Dr. Geo. C. Britner, of St. Louis, which purports to be a practical exposition of the principles of electricity as applied to medicine and surgery. The physiological effects of local and general faradization is discussed under the head of electro therapeutics. The author says in this relation: "Electricity is simply force, and, like other therapeutic measures, must be rightly applied if we expect to accomplish much good with it. To be sure, a mere novice may relieve and cure people with electricity, knowing but little about what is doing, but this is accidental, and such ignorant practitioners are liable to do as much harm as good."

FRESH PAINT.—The current belief among householders that the smell of fresh paint is noxious is founded on pretty general experience, but is opposed by the belief, equally current among chemists, that lead compounds are not volatile. A fact recently brought to our notice seems to support the domestic theory. The basis of the useful and popular luminous paint is known to be sulphide of calcium. Now, this compound, when unprotected by varnish, glass, or some other equally impervious substance, is slowly acted on by the acids of the air, and sulphureted hydrogen is evolved, which blackens lead paint. This is well known, and can easily be avoided by proper protection of the paint. But the curious thing is that unprotected luminous paint is found to be perceptibly blackened by the fumes from fresh lead paint. There seems to be only one possible explanation of this; namely, that a surface freshly covered with lead paint does actually emit some volatile compound of lead. We believe that many physicians could confirm this view from their own observations in regard to newly painted houses.—Lancet.

NEWLY BAKED BREAD INDIGESTIBLE.—A French chemist asserts that it is the mechanical state which makes new bread less digestible than old. The former is so soft, elastic and glutinous in its parts that ordinary mastication fails to reduce it to a sufficiently digestible condition. In the course of some experiments in this direction, a circular loaf, twelve inches in diameter and six inches thick, was taken from an oven heated to 240 degrees Reaumur, and a thermometer forced into it three inches. The thermometer indicated 207.5 degrees Fahr. The loaf was then taken to a room, the temperature of which was 66 degrees, and in thirty-six hours it had fallen to 63.5 degrees. In the first forty-eight hours it lost only two ounces in weight. After six days the loaf was again put in the oven, and when the thermometer had indicated that its temperature had risen to 156 degrees Fahr., it was cut open and found to be fresh, and to possess the same qualities as it had been taken out of the oven the first time, but it had lost twelve ounces in weight. Experiments were made with slices of bread with similar results.

RAILWAY DOCTORS.—On the State railways in Sweden there is generally a doctor for every thirty-two miles of line, and in this way forty-four doctors are employed by the government. The private railways have a similar system. The medical men examine all applicants for employment and reject those physically disqualified, especially by defects of sight or hearing. They also give their services to and attend to all injured by accidents on the line, to regular employes and their families in sickness, to occasional employes while engaged in service, and to laborers in the shops who have paid the same contributions as those engaged in working the line, and also to their families. No exception is made in the case of those who suffer from injury or disease caused by their own fault.

Our Boys and Girls.

Doing as You Please.

[Written for the RURAL PRESS by I. H.]

"Oh, dear, I wish time would go a little faster!"

George Story threw himself down on the lounge in the sitting-room with a heavy sigh.

"To make you a man, I suppose," added his brother, who was reading by the window.

"That's just it," said George. "I'm tired of being ordered around. I would like to know how it feels to do as you please."

The older brother smiled.

"If you think when you are a man you will be able to do just as you please, I am afraid you will find yourself greatly mistaken when the time comes. Who, of all the men about here, does only what he likes? If you have ever seen him, I am sure I have not."

"I don't know what you mean," George answered. "They all do as they please, it seems to me, or if they don't, I should like to know who it is that hinders them."

"You'll find out who it is one of these days," said Henry, with a laugh. "Sometimes it's a fellow called Circumstances; sometimes it's another, whose name is Conscience."

"Oh, don't give us a sermon" exclaimed George, in a slightly disgusted tone, and just then, to his great surprise, Aunt Emily came out of the next room. The doors had been open, and she had heard every word.

"I didn't know you were in there," said the boy, "but anyhow I don't care."

"Why should you? You have not said anything very dreadful, only what all boys, and girls too, are apt to think at some time or other. And I came in to make a proposal. When your father and mother go away with Henry on Wednesday, and you and I are left alone, suppose we try the experiment of doing just as we like for a while?"

George was very fond of his bright young aunt; they always had famous times together when she came on a visit, and his occasional fits of ill temper were sure to give way before her sunny smile. He sat up now, and looked at her with his head on one side.

"I suppose you think I'm like one of the fellows in the goody-goody kind of stories, who are allowed to have their own way and get into all kinds of scrapes and are sick of it before the day is over."

"Oh no, I don't," said Aunt Emily.

"Well, I'm glad of it, for I'm not. I've got better sense than that; and I think I know how to have a good time without breaking my leg or burning down the barn, or doing anything else outrageous."

"If I did not think so too you may be sure I should not have suggested any such plan. So it is a bargain—I am not to do anything I don't like, and neither are you."

"All right," said George, "I wonder who will be tired of it first; I don't think it will be me."

As he went out of the room, Henry said, laughingly, "Well, Auntie Em, I think you are a brave woman. How on earth do you expect to get on here alone with a fellow who will do nothing but what he chooses?"

"Wait and see," said Aunt Emily. "I'm not a bit afraid. It will be the best kind of a lesson for George, better than a dozen lectures."

And in private she gave a hint to her brother and his wife, so that they went away to place their eldest son at college, without giving George any directions as to what he should do during their absence.

"Good-by, my boy, you are boss of the ranch till I come back," said his father, as they drove out of the gate in the early morning.

George went back to the house. Aunt Emily was washing the dishes (was that one of the things she liked to do?). He did not ask; indeed he was not thinking of their contract at all. He only remembered that he was left in charge of everything on the place, and with a sudden sense of responsibility he went on to the stable. The colts were to be turned out into the pasture, and then the cows; the stable was to be cleaned, the pigs and the chickens were to be fed. Without once questioning whether he liked to do all these things or not, the boy went to work with a will, taking a pride in having everything as well done as if his father and Henry had both been there.

Going through the garden afterwards he noticed that the weeds were taking possession of his mother's flower beds. She had been too busy of late to give them much attention. He took up the hoe and began a warfare upon the interlopers.

"Why, George, where have you been all the morning?" said Aunt Emily, coming to the door. "Oh, I see—how nice you are making that border look! Won't your mother be pleased? But do you know it is almost dinner time?"

"Dinner time already?" said George. "Where has the day gone? But I believe I have a sense of emptiness, now that I think of it. I hope there's something good for dinner."

What if Aunt Emily had said, "I don't like cooking. I have been reading ever since breakfast time?" But she did not. Her answer was, "Yes, I think there is something you will like. It will be ready in fifteen minutes."

How nice everything was! Aunt Emily knew George's taste, and had consulted it in all her preparations.

"What have you been doing all day?" he asked her.

"I? Oh, a little of everything. There was the churning to do, and a few pieces to iron left over from yesterday, and your mother's room to put in order, and the dinner to cook, and a cake to bake for a boy I know."

"But I thought—" George began, with a sudden remembrance of the plan they had made together, then seeing the amused smile on his aunt's face, he laughed and left the sentence unfinished.

"Don't you think we might go over to Uncle John's this afternoon and come round by the post-office to get the mail?"

"Yes indeed, I should like it very much," she answered.

"Well, then, let's go early; the cherries are ripe, and we can have a fine time. I'll help you with the dishes."

Oh George, George! If there is anything in fact that George had often declared that reading aloud was one of the things he mortally hated.

Saturday afternoon came and the father and mother were expected at any moment.

"Well," said Aunt Emily, as she and George waited and watched for them on the front porch, "how do you think we have got on?"

"First rate. I'd like to keep house with you always, Auntie Em, as Harry calls you."

"Oh, but I mean how have we managed about doing as we pleased?"

"Come, now," said George, slightly abashed, "to tell the truth, I think you were a little hard on a fellow when you proposed that."

"Why?" asked his aunt. "I am sure I did not mean to be."

"Well, you made a bargain and you didn't keep it—"

"Yes I did, George. I kept my part of it, I assure you. I have done just as I pleased ever since we have been alone, and you; how have you kept your part?"

"Well," said George, slowly, "I've done done lots of things I never liked to do before; but somehow I didn't think whether I liked to do them or not. I know I didn't want to leave them undone. Yes, I guess I have kept my part of the bargain too; but you have managed to get the better of me, Auntie Em."

"Haven't you got the better of yourself? It is one thing to tell a willful child he may do any mischief he likes unchided, it is another to leave a boy of your age to the guidance of his own sense of responsibility. That is what every man has to control him if he is worth calling a man. And, after all, it is so very easy to do just as you like always, if one knows the secret of it. All that is necessary is to train yourself to like whatever it is your duty to do. There comes the wagon, (George; my sermon is

The Great Mississippi Bridge.

We present on this page a cut of the great bridge over the Mississippi at St. Louis. Not many years ago, in anti-bridge days, passengers were ferried across the Mississippi and landed on the crowded levee at a great inconvenience. But now, thanks to a great architect and mechanical skill, the tired traveler sits in his comfortable car until it reaches its depot in the heart of the city. The upper Mississippi has been spanned by twelve great railroad bridges, costing in the aggregate over $20,000,000, and this one at St. Louis has cost as much as all the other eleven combined. This magnificent structure is a monument to the engineering skill of Capt. James B. Eads, and probably ranks next to the great Brooklyn bridge. How can we describe it? Four massive piers of granite reach down to a rock foundation, more than 100 feet below the surface of the river, and rise 80 feet above the water. These stupendous piers support three immense arches, each one 500 feet long. The arches are composed of steel tubes united by a vast network of iron braces. The bridge has two divisions, the upper portion being used for carriage-ways, horse car tracks and all the world he did not like to do, it was to wash dishes. Yet how he tied on his mother's big kitchen apron, picked up a towel and did his part cheerfully!

They went to Uncle John's, they climbed the cherry trees, they feasted on the beautiful fruit, and spent a happy afternoon.

"Stay to tea," said the group of young cousins; "stay to tea and go home by moonlight."

"Oh indeed we can't," said George decidedly.

"I have all the chores to do." Again he caught the smile on Aunt Emily's face, but it was not one of mere amusement. In her heart she was saying, "I knew I could trust him."

The next morning no one called George, and, like most boys, he did dearly enjoy a good long nap after daylight; so did Aunt Emily, too, for that matter; but she happened to wake about five o'clock, so she got up and dressed herself. What was her surprise when she opened the kitchen door to find a good fire burning and the kettle boiling on the stove!

"Bless the boy!" she said half aloud, just as he came along the path through the orchard, bringing a foaming pail of milk. Their eyes met, and they both laughed outright.

The day passed much as the previous one, but Aunt Emily did not go out in the afternoon. She had seated herself in a large easy chair with a new number of Harper's Magazine in her hand when George came in with a rueful countenance.

"See what I've done. It's my school jacket too, and school begins next week and mother won't be home till Saturday night."

It was an ugly tear on the inside of the sleeve. "I caught it on the barbed wire," he explained as Aunt Emily took it in her hand.

"I dare say I can mend it almost as well as mother," said she laying aside her book.

"But I hate to ask you to do it," said George. "I'm sure you can't like that kind of a job, and you were just going to read that story you were so anxious to get."

"Suppose you read it to me while I mend the hole."

"All right," said George in a tone of relief, "that's only fair."

So while the rent was neatly darned the interesting story was read aloud in spite of the ended. Let us go and give an account of ourselves." Walnut Creek, Cal.

Our Puzzle Box.

Problem.

A gentleman purchased a watch, paying therefor ten per cent more than it was valued by competent judges. He soon exchanged the watch for a horse, and paid boot to the amount of $47.50. The horse was damaged shortly after upon the highway to such an extent that it was found necessary to kill him. Thereupon the town awarded $95.00 as damages. In reckoning up his entire loss, the gentleman found it to be $7.50 more than one sixth of the price he paid for the watch.

What was his loss in these transactions?

Charade.

Probably no man ever attained a greater fame as a writer of charades than Wm. Mackworth Praed, once editor of one of the most popular of English reviews. Below we print one of his best charades, although, as few Americans are familiar with Praed's works, it is not likely that it has ever before met the eyes of any of our readers. Even though a few have seen it, they may be in the dark as regards the solutions.

My first was dark o'er earth and air,
As dark as she could be;
The stars that gemmed her ebony hair,

Leaving the bridge the trains plunge into a tunnel as black as midnight, and nearly a mile in length, passing under the city to the great Union Depot, which is one of the busiest places to be found in the whole country. Morning and evening one can there see no less than a dozen trains standing ready to depart to all points of the compass.

Progress in Electric Discovery.

Several announcements of remarkable discoveries in the electric field of science have quite recently been announced: The London Times of a recent date informs us that a new electrical contrivance had been perfected by Mr. A. St. George, the inventor or the telephone which bears his name. This invention, which is really supplemental to the telephone, will enable every description of conversation carried on through the instrument to be not only recorded, but reproduced at any future time. Briefly stated, Mr. St. George's invention may be thus described: A circular plate of glass is coated with collodion and made sensitive as a photographic plate. This is placed in a dark box, in which is a slide to admit a ray of light. In front of the glass is a telephone diaphragm, which, by its vibrations, opens and closes a small shutter through which a beam of light is constantly passing and imprinting a dark line on the glass. Vibrations of the shutter cause the dark line to vary in thickness according to the tones of the voice. The glass plate is revolved by clock-work, and the conversation as it leaves the telephone is recorded on the sensitive plate, the imprinted words spoken being fixed as is done in photography. The plate can be brought forward afterwards, and when replaced in the machine and connected with a distant telephone, will, when set in motion, give back the original conversation.

More About the Pengelly Case.

EDITORS WATCHMAN: I notice in your paper from time to time comments upon "the Pengelly case," and in your last issue you say "we are suffering an injustice under the decision in the Pengelly case."

Is it not a little surprising that no one but yourself can see the injustice? And if there be an injustice anywhere is it not on Nevada rather than California? Look over your rolls of membership and I doubt not but that you will find a number who joined you August 25, 1882. Did you call on them to pay assessments 14 and 15? No; justice demands that Pengelly should pay to Nevada assessments called on deaths that occurred prior to August 25, even if such calls were made at the time he was a member of your jurisdiction and this he did to some extent, for on the first of September when Nevada called an assessment there was at least one dollar of Pengelly's money there to meet the call.

Are you not weakening a little also on the stand you have taken heretofore when you suggest that everyone should be made liable for the first assessment called after he joins the Order? Evidently by this some have not been liable.

Remarks.

Our good brother makes an assumption and then gets up a sort of surprise party. Others besides ourselves do see the injustice resulting from the decision in the Pengelly case. As to the injustice being on Nevada rather than on California, we have to answer, not under the decision. If it be under the law, that is another matter. The decision does not affect the jurisdiction from which a member goes, but the one to which he goes, in any particular case. For instance, in the case referred to, Nevada got no more from Brother Pengelly than if the decision had not been made, while we got three dollars less. It is not the justice or injustice of the law regarding transfers that we have been considering, but the injustice of the decision by which the transferred member is put in the same category as one who first joins the Order, despite the letter of the statute to the contrary, which provides that assessments shall be levied on all members in good standing who received the M. W. degree prior to the date of the death on which assessments are made. The matters of good standing, the fact and date of receiving the M. W. degree are the only ones stated in the law by which to determine the liability or non-liability of a member to assessments, but the decision goes outside the law and puts in another condition, and that is what we complain of, and as it works a palpable injustice we have a right to complain.

Brother Pengelly did pay in Nevada on all assessments that had been called there up to August 25, 1882, but not on all deaths that had occurred in the jurisdiction prior to his transfer, and the law does not require that he should. This may be right, and it may not, but such is the law. Our Brother should keep the argument where it belongs.

What is meant by our "weakening" we are at a loss to understand. If he means that we follow the law by exempting from assessments all who do not receive the M. W. degree prior to the date on which an assessment is made (but that we think the law should not exempt in any case), then we are "weakening" to the last degree. That would be more just by far than the present law, and remedy the standing injustice of the Pengelly decision.

We are happy to state that our Grand Lodge unanimously concurred in the views of the WATCHMAN by vote at the recent session, and our Representatives are charged with the duty of endeavoring to accomplish such legislation in the Supreme Lodge as shall remedy the injustice complained of.

Lodge Rings.

We often hear the complaint made on the part of some member that his Lodge is run by a clique or ring. A few control the Lodge and have matters all their own way. The complaint is, in most instances, well founded, and this is to be deplored; but who is to blame for it? The members of the ring have no more voting strength than any other like number who are not of the select few, so to speak. It is plain that the ring is only such by sufferance. The fact is, in nine cases out of ten, where a ring exists at all, it is because a few take an interest in the Lodge, and have all the work to do and do it. The balance lay back and indulge in the delightful luxury of grumbling. Things don't go right, but they are too indolent to take hold in real earnest and right them. And so it comes to pass that rings are a necessity to the very existence of the Lodge, and it illy becomes those who are not willing to do their full share of the Lodge work to complain of those who are willing. On general principles we are opposed to rings, but in Lodge matters they are so often a necessity that we have come to look on them with feelings not unmixed with satisfaction. Better an enterprising ring than a dead Lodge.

Is It Good Policy?

Supreme Recorder Sackett advocates the plan of reducing the maximum number of assessments in the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction under the Relief Lodge. It is now twenty-four, and, as we understand him, he would have it twenty. Then he would stipulate that Kentucky, Texas, etc., should go to work in real earnest to build up their respective memberships. We should favor the plan if we thought it would work the hoped for result, but we fear the contrary would be the case. With these States twenty assessments a year is as few as they could expect under a separate condition, and there would be no object that we can perceive to work for. They—especially Kentucky—would be content to remain as they are; satisfied to let the whole Order bear a burden that would probably be a relief to these weak jurisdictions.

We believe in a general Relief Law, but we want it true to name. Its machinery, in our opinion, should never be called into action except to give relief in cases of emergency. In other words, it is our idea that the maximum number of assessments of any and every jurisdiction should be placed as high as can be borne in any case and not endanger the life of the jurisdiction.

Since Ohio was forced into separation, she has done far better than for a like period in many years. Under the fear of excessive assessments, she went about increasing her membership by the addition of fresh and healthy material, and the result is a lower death-rate and fewer assessments than when under the Supreme Lodge jurisdiction. It seems to us that nothing short of a peril of like character will ever infuse new life into Kentucky.

CAPTURED IN AMBUSH.—On the evening of the 23d instant, at West Oakland, the residence of Brother H. G. Pratt, Grand Recorder, was surrounded by a raiding party from Golden Dawn, No. 10, D. of H., San Francisco, and the entire family of Brother Pratt (his wife, two daughters and son), were completely surprised and taken captives. This raiding party, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Poland, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Bordwell, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. James Nisbet, Mr. and Mrs. Austin King, Mr. Sam Booth, Mr. J. H. Weil, Mrs. Ella N. Payson, Miss Ella M. Booth, Miss Kate Hasson and Miss Moultrie, and when near their destination they were met by Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Watson, who willingly consented to join them on learning that the spoils were to be equally divided. Brother Pratt and his family were quite overcome with doubt as to the cause of this intrusion upon the sanctity of their quiet home, and it was not until their leader, Brother Poland, assured them that no harm was intended (on the condition that a full surrender would be required), that their fears subsided. Brother Poland then in a few well chosen words said that they were friends and not enemies, that they had come in the interests of friendship, and intended to have a good time. Brother Pratt with a full assurance of safety responded that they were all welcome, and hoped that each and all would enjoy such a pleasant evening, that in future it would be one of fond recollection. The evening was most happily spent in song and conversation. At a late hour the party bade Brother Pratt and family a good night's rest and naught but prosperity and cheer to the end of life, each and all feeling that it was good to thus live and love.

ERRATA.—In the press of work incident to the details of publishing the Grand Lodge report in our last issue, two omissions, small in extent but important in nature, were inadvertently made in the body of the report. The first was the election of Supreme Representatives Barnes, Jordan and Brewer. These, however, appeared correctly in the revised list of Grand Lodge officers, published at the head of the standing directory. The other was the omission to state that the Grand Lodge degree was conferred on the first lot of candidates by Grand Lecturer Reading, being especially invited by the Grand Lodge. This will lessen the number mentioned in the miscellaneous notes as having received the degree from Past Grand Master Barnes.

STORM BOUND.—Those who missed in the Grand Lodge our genial Brother William C. Flint, who was a member of the Committee on Appeals and Grievances, will be glad to know that it was through no fault of his own that he was not there. He was storm-bound in the mountains of San Diego county, the nearest neighbor being seven miles away, and the nearest postoffice, Poway, 75 miles. According to a letter written to Burns Lodge, he must have had a most interesting time of it. With a companion he was imprisoned by the storm in an old adobe hut, at an altitude of 6,000 feet, for over two weeks with nothing to eat for part of the time except fresh pork and wild honey—both captured by themselves. We hope to give a fuller account of his interesting experiences in another issue.

Select Knights, A. O. U. W.

Brother I. E. Alexander, P. M. W. of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, is taking steps to have instituted in San Francisco a Legion of Select Knights of the A. O. U. W. The charter list is now in circulation and is headed by the name of the Grand Master Workman, Brother David McClure. Brother Alexander is confident that he will start a Legion with 200 charter members, composed of men among the best in the Order. In response to an inquiry concerning this organization, we would state that it is a semi-military branch with additional insurance at option, and aims to be to the A. O. U. W., what the Order of Knights Templar is to Masonry. Its connection with the Order is best explained by the following resolutions, adopted by the Supreme Lodge at its session in 1882, held at Cincinnati Ohio:

WHEREAS, There has been instituted within the United States an organization known as the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W., and,

WHEREAS, None but Master Workmen in good standing in our Order are eligible to membership in said organization, and

WHEREAS, Good standing in the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W. is made contingent upon good standing as a Master Workman in our Order, and

WHEREAS, The said organization is a great help to us as an Order, inducing young men to join our Order; therefore, be it

Resolved, that this Supreme Lodge recognizes in the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W., an agency for good in our Order, and we wish for it continued prosperity.

PERSONAL.—We received last week a most pleasant sanction call from Brother George H. Buck, Recorder of Redwood Lodge, No. 25, of Redwood City. Brother Buck is District Attorney of San Mateo county, quondam editor of the San Mateo County Journal, and is a young man who will be yet further heard from in the affairs of this State. Grand Overseer Edwin Danforth, together with his family, expects to start East May 6th on a pleasure excursion, which recreation he needs and deserves. He will attend the Supreme Lodge session at Toronto, and keep his eyes open for matters of interest in Workmanship generally. We are glad to inform our readers that we have his promise for correspondence of interest in this connection.

THERE are two assessments in the Supreme Jurisdiction for April.

Abstract of Grand Master Workman's Annual Report.

Application for Extension of Charter.

In the matter of Bay District Lodge, No. 226, who asked that they could keep their charter open sixty days, or thirty days longer than was originally granted, the petition was refused on November 21st, for lack of power, as the law was silent, and hence no discretion could be exercised.

Application of W. A. Holt for Rehearing.

In August, Santa Rosa Lodge, No. 28, asked for a rehearing in the case of W. A. Holt, expelled for being over age at the time of his admission. After a full examination of all new evidence, etc., a rehearing was granted November 8th, and an order was issued directing the appointment of a new Committee, with instructions to proceed as if on an original charge. On December 12th, the Lodge reported its compliance with the order, and stated that the Committee had reported a finding that Holt was 47 years old at the time of joining, and recommended his payment of $23 assessments and $5 dues. This report was unanimously adopted; payment made, and his Beneficiary Certificate restored to standing November 28, 1883. The law was new and there was no precedent, so one was made. The same course was pursued with the case of George Martin.

Chico Lodge vs. Mt. Hamilton.

This was a case in which Chico Lodge refused to recognize the depositing of a card by a former member of theirs with Mt. Hamilton Lodge because the Committee of the latter Lodge had not communicated with Chico Lodge according to law. The G. M. W. ruled that the member should not have his certificate imperiled from the shortcomings of others, and declared him to be released from obligation to Chico Lodge and to be a member of Mt. Hamilton.

J. A. Greenwood vs. Amador Lodge.

This was a claim for $50 from the Lodge for a coffin furnished them in which to bury a deceased member. The Lodge refused to recognize the legality of ordering it at a special meeting. The G. M. W. suggested that the matter be referred to a special committee of five, and that if this body determine to order the payment of said claim that its judgment be speedily enforced.

Cases that Were Dropped.

The cases of F. K. Krauth Jr., vs. Alameda Lodge for, as alleged, failing to declare a member suspended for non-payment in the time prescribed by law, and the case of D. B. Libby, a telegraph operator, vs. Golden Gate Lodge fined for non-attendance at a funeral were both dropped.

Ed. F. Adams vs. Excelsior Lodge.

In the matter of an appeal in the above case, and the question of a right of a Lodge to pay the assessments of brothers about to become delinquent, when the by-laws of the Lodge forbid loaning the funds to members, the Master Workman decided that it was not a loan, and was sustained by Deputy Poland. The Grand Master Workman gives as his opinion that the action of the Master Workman and Lodge, in directing said payment, was erroneous and in conflict with the said by-law.

T. W. Ray vs. Triumph Lodge.

In this case, where the appellant was expelled for assisting a man to membership fraudulently, it being so near the Grand Lodge session, the matter is left to that body. In my opinion the testimony clearly establishes the guilt of the accused, and demonstrates that our obligations have no moral power on his conscience. The Committee on Appeals find that the action of Triumph Lodge, No. 180, in this matter is without substantial error, and should be sustained.

Laying Memorial Stone of Excelsior Lodge.

In the latter part of October, a request was presented from Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, of San Francisco, to officially conduct the ceremonies of laying a "Memorial Stone" for their New Hall. An acceptance was at once transmitted, and invitations sent to all the Grand Officers to attend. They all were present, save the Grand Foreman, Grand Guide and Deputy Grand Master Workman. On the 14th day of November, the officers of the Grand Lodge, accompanied by the Supreme Master Workman, invited guests, and Excelsior Lodge, repaired to the building. The ceremonial used was prepared by a Past Master Workman of Excelsior, Sam Booth. To that brother is due the distinguished honor of being the first to prepare a ceremonial for such a purpose. In this connection, allow me the pleasure of a suggestion. Nothing can more eloquently demonstrate to the public our stability, and the value of our Brotherhood, than the construction and ownership of our own Lodge-rooms. Besides usually being a good investment, there is a permanence, a home feeling, a perpetual treasury for our gold of soul and hand. Title to land is man's grandest prerogative. And as this sentiment is growing, and therefore occasions arising, it might be well for this Grand Lodge to appoint a committee to prepare and submit a "Memorial Ritual." Let California be an exemplar in this matter.

Fraternal Visits.

During the months of November and December I had the honor to spend about five weeks in the San Joaquin Valley—a section of our State presenting the grandest possibilities—amid the splendors of the "City of Angels," and the counties bordering the Pacific—those principalities whose brilliant future no imagination can paint. Amid the lavish prodigalities of nature, it would be strange not to find a large-heartedness in the citizens commensurate with their surroundings. A generous hospitality was everywhere extended. The usual routine was to meet with the Lodge, exemplify the "work," confer degrees, make fraternal remarks, and then address the public. Large and highly intellectual audiences were gathered at all the larger towns, especially at Visalia, Los Angeles and San Jose.

Official Visitations.

The following is a list of my official visitations:

April 6th, 1883—Visited Yerba Buena Lodge, No. 14, and met delegations from Spartan, No. 36, and Franklin, No. 44. April 30th—Officially present at an entertainment of Oak Leaf Lodge, No. 35, in Oakland. May 1st—Officially present at May-day Picnic of Healdsburg Lodge, No. 31. June 28th—Visited Ukiah Lodge, No. 33. July 14th—Westport Lodge, 207, for installation, public. July 16th—Mendocino Lodge, No. 70, for installation, private. July 18th—Navarro Lodge, No. 200, for installation, public. July 19th—Gualala Lodge, No. 221, and conferred degrees. August 14th—Attended S. M. W. Fish's reception at Oakland. August 15th—Visited Fidelity Lodge, No. 136. August 15th—Valley Lodge, No. 30. August 16th—Excelsior Lodge, No. 126. August 18th—Fraternal Institute. August 20th—Memorial Lodge, No. 174. November 16th—Stockton Lodge, No. 23. November 15th—Empire Lodge, No. 112, Modesto. November 17th—Merced Lodge, No. 74. November 19th—Yosemite Lodge, No. 171, Fresno. November 23d—Los Angeles Lodge, No. 55, and Southern California Lodge, No. 191. November 26th—Ventura Lodge, No. 173, San Buenaventura. November 27th—Santa Barbara Lodge, No. 172. November 28th—Los Alamos Lodge, No. 219. November 29th—Higuera Lodge, No. 194, and Olive Lodge, No. 212, San Luis Obispo. December 1st—Sausal Lodge, No. 47, Salinas. December 3d—Watsonville Lodge, No. 45. December 4th—Santa Cruz Lodge, No. 46. December 5th—Enterprise Lodge, No. 17, and Mount Hamilton Lodge, No. 43, San Jose.

Dispensations.

A long list of special dispensations granted to confer degrees, change nights and places of meetings, etc., is omitted here as not now of general interest.

Financial Statement.

My account stands thus:

Traveling expenses (partly estimated), $557; telegraphing, $28.75; postage and expressage, $40.25; short-hand reporter and copyist, $61.40; miscellaneous, $62.60.

The appropriation was $750. This sum was not augmented by any donations for lectures or exhibitions under the auspices of the Order.

Suggestions.

It is sincerely hoped this body will not consider it any intrusion upon its prerogatives if some hints as to needed legislation are tendered. Your officials become familiar with deficiencies.

In case the Supreme or Grand Lodge should restore a member to good standing, after an appeal, the law is silent as to what monetary obligations the "restored" owes to his Lodge. The "Menish Case" created very discordant opinions, though it was settled by his payment of all demands.

The law should define what kind of proofs will be required to establish "relationship" to a decedent of persons claiming to be heirs or legatees, who are non-residents. It is now discretionary with the Grand Master Workman, which is embarrassing and dangerous. Our State laws in probate cases prefer oral evidence, but, when required, admit affidavits. Again, would it be wise to require a bond of indemnity, and a resident attorney in fact, to receipt for the money in cases of absent heirs?

Perhaps no cause is more fruitful of trouble, anxiety, and danger, than the failure to insert the name of a beneficiary in the certificate. There should be a determinate and known nominee. It is a reasonable requirement. It is wise to refuse to issue a certificate without a name. The Grand Lodge should not assume the burden of deciding, at its peril, contested relationships. There should be no uncertainties.

Except in San Francisco and Oakland, it would be a good law that would compel every applicant to join his nearest Lodge. It is generally suspicious when a man does not want to join at home. His neighbors are good judges of a man's moral, social, and physical habits. The plan has worked well in older Orders.

It is a very frequent request to ask a dispensation to meet twice a month. The granting thereof is now discretionary. Experience demonstrates that it would be good policy, where Lodges meet but twice per month, to establish two certain weeks in the month for their meetings, say the first and third weeks.

Common observation as to the results and workings of our present system strongly recommends a new basis of apportionment for our representation herein. A modification, producing a decrease of numbers, and a saving of money, would doubtless show the sagacity of the change. The sentiments and demands of fraternity call for a large representation, while considerations of economy, judicial investigations, facility of work, and legislative clearness dictate a smaller body.

There are strongly discordant interpretations of the third condition—"The Lodge shall, by a majority vote declare said certificate renewed"—of Section 10, Article 13, Grand Lodge Constitution. One side contend that it is a duty of the Lodge to renew by majority vote. While the other side say it is discretionary with the Lodge, and that it may exercise its option, and absolutely defeat the restoration of a Beneficiary Certificate to good standing, and thus ultimately eliminate a member from the Order.

When an appeal or memorial is decided by this body, or by the Supreme Lodge on appeal therefrom, the law is now silent as to the method of communicating the said decision to the Lodge, and it is further mute as to what time the judgment takes effect, whether at the time of its rendition by this body, or by the Supreme Lodge, or at the meeting when it is read in the Lodge. The uncertainty may lead to embarrassment.

Every organization must practically embody, and proclaim, one or more central truths. So far, our Order has exhibited a friendly and money benevolence. In extending her limits, she meets competition. Other Orders claim recognition, each presenting its peculiar privileges. In all those based on fraternity there is some provision for sickness and burial. Our Order permits, but does not command, our Lodges to supply money and help for such purposes. Should it be done? Each jurisdiction is herein sovereign.

On the one hand it would increase our dues, consume more personal time, multiply our responsibilities, and encroach upon the domains claimed by other fraternities. And, on the other hand, it would accumulate more money, thereby tending to permanence; enlarge the scope of our fraternal charities, inspire a better faith in humanity, supply our Order with a better armor for a friendly contest in the arena of human benefaction, and be a stronger incentive for the admission of young men.

Finance Committee.

The resignation of John Hoesch, a member of the Finance Committee, on April 17th, 1883, was accepted, and Phillip Peck, of No. 60, was selected for the vacancy. In this connection a suggestion may be pertinent: That the Constitution be so amended that the Finance Committee shall be required to monthly examine the accounts of the Grand Recorder and Grand Receiver, and that they shall also ascertain from the bank, wherein the Grand Lodge funds are kept by the Grand Receiver, what funds are, on the first of each month, deposited to the credit of the Grand Receiver, and if there be any delinquency or variation in the account, not fully explained, to report the same at once to the Grand Master Workman. During last November, ascertaining that the Committee did not construe the Constitution as above indicated, the responsibility was assumed of making an order to that effect. For this action there was no special reason, except that ordinary prudence suggested a close inspection in all money affairs. There being no complaint, all is presumed to be correct.

Abstract of Grand Master Workman's Annual Report.

Case of Mrs. Walker.

As a legacy from the last administration, the application of Mrs. Walker, of San Francisco, for the beneficiary money of her husband, was transmitted to me. It appeared that her husband, a member of Valley, No. 30, had sailed to the Arctic seas, as Master and part owner of a whaling vessel, from San Francisco, something over a year before. That no tidings had ever come from ship or crew; that she was thought to be lost; that all the insurance on the vessel had long been paid; that she was entered as lost on the books at the Custom House. The above facts seemed strong as presumptions. Hence, though denying their conclusiveness, a determination was communicated to Mrs. Walker that she would be paid upon her giving the Grand Master Workman an indemnity bond of $4,000. This she finally did under the supervision of D. G. M. W. Wilson, and the money was paid. Nothing has since been heard of the final fate of our Brother.

San Francisco General Relief Committee.

Immediately after the close of our last session, it was found that the Relief Committee of San Francisco was about to dissolve. A letter of encouragement was sent to it, asking that it work a little longer, and "wait till the clouds roll by." In compliance with my request, and inspired by the spirit of brotherhood, the Committee girded itself for another year. It would be too long to particularize its specific labors, but it is proper to say that it has done good royal work in the cause of sorrow. Wherever the ashes of desolation had fallen on the home of the stranger and afflicted, there came the ministering offices of some member of this Committee. Much of the work has been unseen of the crowd, but it is happily garnered in the memory of its recipients. As to its proposition to come before this body, no intimation, either of condemnation or endorsement is made. If the Committee can usefully exist without our help it should do it; but if it cannot, then let the calm, sober, moral, money thought of this assemblage deal with this question as the highest interest and honor of the entire jurisdiction may dictate. California Workmanship has always been grand, and liberal, and watchful, laying aside all personal feeling. Let her history inspire your action.

Bieber vs. Lookout.

Immediately after your last session a petition was forwarded to me, asking for authority to institute a Lodge at Bieber, in Lassen county. To its granting, Lookout Lodge, No. 211, of Modoc county, made a solemn protest. The petition was denied on the ground that though apparently the location of the Lodge at Lookout was a grave mistake, yet that the logical and physical effect of the establishment of a Lodge at Bieber would be to destroy Lookout Lodge. The Constitution of the United States has guaranteed to each State a republican form of government, and has pledged itself to its maintenance. So has our Grand Lodge pledged itself to support the dignity and maintain the integrity and identity of each Lodge. This is a duty emanating from its sovereignty.

The Matter of Henry C. Essley.

A letter, dated Kansas City, Mo., May 1st, and signed by Mrs. Mattie Pratt, was received in due time. From said letter and our records it appeared that one Henry C. Essley, a member of Dunnigan Lodge, No. 215, died intestate, at Dunnigan, Yolo county, California, March 8, 1883, and that his Beneficiary Certificate was payable to his will. That Mrs. Pratt was a full sister, and, as his next heir, demanded his beneficiary. That there were two half-sisters and two half-brothers living at Washington, Iowa, who demanded four-fifths of the $2,000. Now then, the main question arose whether Mrs. Pratt, as a full sister, was entitled to all the money, or whether she was to get one-fifth, and the half-sisters and half-brothers were each to get one-fifth. Held that under Sections 1386 (clause 3) and 1394 of the Civil Code of California, the half-blood inherits equally with the full-blood, and each was, therefore, entitled to one-fifth, or $400.

Select Knights of the A. O. U. W.

September 29th, a communication was received from Deputy Al. Cobler, asking "if the Jurisdiction of California forbids the establishment of the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W." To which answer was returned, that this Grand Lodge had refused the Knights any recognition. [See report of G. M. W. Taylor, Journal 1881, pages 28, 76, 115, 116 and 117.] But that the Supreme Lodge at Cincinnati, June, 1882, [see Journal, pages 644-5] said, by a vote of 86 to 61 "That this Supreme Lodge recognizes in the select Knights of the A. O. U. W. an agency for good in our Order, and we wish for it continued prosperity." It was, therefore, held that the Knights had the standing above indicated, and that each member was left to the dominion of his own conscience and judgment.

Guarantee Fund Association.

A response to a letter from the Secretary of this Association asking for "a letter of general introduction * * * for Oregon, in the interest of the Workmen's Guarantee Fund Association, and the A. O. U. W. generally," this answer was given: "The construction that I placed upon that sentence was, and is, that you desired me, in my official capacity, to give you a letter of general introduction as the Secretary of the 'Workmen's Guarantee Fund Association.' Now, I will concede that the Grand Lodge, in its sovereign power, would have a right to give a recommendation concerning anybody or anything within the limits of its Constitution; but when the Grand Lodge is not in session the Grand Master is merely an executive officer to perform its functions, for the sake of expediency, and of convenience to the membership at large. The law in each instance is the measure of his power, and only in those instances where discretion is absolutely vested has he a right to exercise a discretion. Now, furthermore, your Association is neither legally nor fraternally directly associated with the Workmanship of California; and while I believe it is doing great good, and beneficial in the limits of its organization, still, to the Grand Lodge, as far as my opinion is concerned, it occupies the same relative position as organizations of Odd Fellows, Masons or any other fraternal or mutual insurance body. I don't presume that any one would contend that the Grand Master could attach his official signature, endorsing a Masonic body, or anything of that kind. * * * I cannot do it officially."

Fraternal Institute.

In response to a communication from Memorial Lodge, No. 174, asking about the legality of the Fraternal Institute, an organization among the San Francisco Lodges to secure correctness and uniformity of work, as an answer, the attention of the Lodge was called to the report of G. M. W. Barnes, as follows (page 19, Journal 1883, and its approval, page 86.)

The Lodge not being satisfied, addressed me the following question: "Can a member legally communicate the semi-annual password to any person, save and except to the duly qualified officer or officers of a regularly constituted Lodge, working under proper legal authority, as provided by the laws of the Supreme Lodge of the A. O. U. W.?"

To this the reply was made, that it mattered not what my personal views were, that the Grand Lodge had passed upon the question, and there was no chance for any discretion. That if this stand were untenable, an appeal lay. On August 20th I had the honor to attend the meeting of Memorial, and was most cordially received. The matter was discussed. My position was: That, if not clearly within the Supreme law, the "Institute" was grandly within its liberal spirit; that its work was good, pure and elevating; that my conscience did not upbraid me for "giving the semi-annual password" to an officer of the "Institute," on the preceding night, when an official visit had been made there by me. In these views the Lodge acquiesced.

Stockton Lodge vs. Grand Medical Examiner.

In January a communication was received from Stockton, No. 23, claiming that the Grand Medical Examiner, Dr. Simpson, had violated the law in relation to Circulars. [See Section 16, Laws of Grand Lodge of California.] It appeared that the Doctor had suffered much annoyance in the collection of his fee of twenty-five cents; and that he had issued a circular thereabouts, without the endorsement of the Grand Master Workman. Without rendering any decision, communications were addressed to Dr. Simpson, and to Stockton Lodge, expressing my views and requesting each side to send such suggestions to the Chairman on Amendments as they might see fit. A note was also sent to the Chairman, stating the points at issue, and requesting the committee to suggest to this body necessary legislation.

Shady Grove on Bureau of Relief.

On January 3d, the Committee on Amendments sent out to all the Lodges the Bureau of Relief Amendments. About February 10th a petition was received from Shady Grove Lodge, No. 223, asking for permission to print, and distribute "to each Lodge in the Jurisdiction," certain resolutions. The petition was denied for two reasons, because the resolutions were very positive, and it seemed proper that each Lodge should act on its own responsibility, and because most of the Lodges had already acted thereon. A suggestion was made that the Lodge, if inclined, could address a "memorial" to this body, stating its views upon the propriety of adopting said amendments.

Appeals.

An appeal in the case of Arthur Fleming vs. Hearts of Oak Lodge was decided after consideration by the proper committee in favor of the plaintiff whose beneficiary certificate was suspended for non-payment without sufficient and proper proof of notification, and it was ordered reinstated.

An appeal was received from the Master Workman of Gualala Lodge, No. 221, whose decision was not sustained in ruling that it was necessary to give notice from one meeting to another before a motion to reconsider the motion of a previous meeting would be in order. On consideration by the proper committee and the G. M. W., the ruling of the M. W. of Gualala was pronounced correct.

An appeal was received from Leon Carran vs. Noe Valley Lodge, No. 385, which Lodge adopted the majority report of "Not guilty," of an investigating committee in the case of a member who was charged with misrepresenting his age to obtain admission to the Order. The verdict was ordered set aside, as contrary to evidence.

Smoking in Lodge Rooms.

Isaac Birnbaum appealed from the decision of District Deputy Carroll sustaining the action of Washington Lodge, No. 60, in permitting smoking during Lodge sessions. Some of Bro. Birnbaum's argument was as follows:

As stated in my appeal to the District Deputy, I refer to Article 2, of Section 10, of the Constitution for Subordinate Lodges, namely: "The Master Workman shall preserve order during the meeting." How to do it, and what constitutes the term "order" is not expressed, but in defining the meaning of a word we are governed by its general application, for if the theory of the District Deputy were right a Lodge could, by their vote, allow loud laughing or boisterous language, or they might legislate to take things comfortable in general, to put the feet on the tables or chairs. No written law treats on this subject, but it is fully understood in any organization to be disorderly; the same way in regard to smoking, which has up to now been well defined to be out of order during transaction of our Lodge business, and any brother who would have smoked formerly, even in the A. O. U. W., would certainly have been called to order; and since no Lodge can change the meaning of the term, I claim that the general application of the word "order" excludes smoking. Besides this, the spirit of fraternity should prompt our actions, and the motto, "As thou wouldst that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," be our guidance in this matter. How would a brother, who is not a smoker himself, like, during business transactions of a Lodge, to smell the fumes of the, to him, obnoxious habit? Would he not consider it an injustice against his own individual rights? Furthermore, it is one of the fundamental principles of our Order to educate and elevate each other, mentally and morally, advancing ourselves toward a higher and nobler life. Does this probably mean that we should educate our new members who come to join us with the idea of learning some new truths, in the practice of the art of smoking?

The Committee on Appeals decided that smoking in the Lodge during its session is not prohibited by any constitutional provision. It must be controlled by the will of the Lodge, expressed by by-law, resolution, or rule of order, or in the absence of such, by order of the Master Workman with the silent acquiescence or expressed consent of the Lodge. It is a custom in some Lodges, perhaps "more honored in the breach than in the observation," and in the absence of any prohibitory by-law, resolution or rule of order, and sanctioned by a large majority vote and the Master Workman, it cannot be considered disorderly, even though it causes discomfort to the minority, who do not indulge in the habit. We therefore find, and so advise you, that the action of the Lodge in sustaining the ruling of the Master Workman should be affirmed and his ruling sustained.

It is with some regret that my endorsement cannot be added to that of the Lodge, Deputy and Committee. It seems that their opinions and judgment are based on narrow and technical grounds, and should be reversed for these reasons: First, tobacco smoke is a poison, and detrimental to the health, and tends to nervous disorders, and is sickening to many in a close room. In many it induces nausea, and headache, and hence its indulgence causes the absence of some from the Lodge-room. Its discomfort to some is a violation of the golden rule by those indulging. Second, it is contrary to good manners and polished refinement. It degrades the Lodge Hall to the freedom of the Club-room. Would it favorably impress a candidate if the altar were clouded in smoke by the Past Master Workman while the obligation was taken? Would it add to the solemnity of our Ritual if all the brothers were smoking while our mournful chant was rising from the open grave? Would a Lodge-room, filled with smoke, be an inspirational scene of pathos, where pity's tears might be treasured by hovering angels? Or would it not suggest absinthe—and Hebe's rollicking rye? Does a smoky Hall present a place for a symposium wherein the delicate tastes and aesthetic feelings of our ladies may be duly indulged? Third, the term "order" contains a prohibition. There can be no better test of what is order than to ascertain if a thing can be done in the presence of ladies and not give offense? What gentleman would dare stigmatize his own manhood by offering to smoke in the presence of ladies, without first gaining her consent? Her consent remits the penalty. By general understanding "order" means what may be innocently done, without giving any offense to the body or mind of your neighbor. By common consent, and without rule, smoking would not "be in order" in a parlor, in a court, in a convention, in a Legislature, or in Congress. Should our Lodge-rooms have less dignity or refinement? The object of our Fraternity is partly to moralize and to excite the electrical powers of the mind, and to manifest the latent attributes of manhood. For these, and other reasons, the above decisions should be reversed, and this Grand Lodge should, by law, prohibit smoking in our Lodge Rooms.

Rehearings, Inquiries, Etc.

In the case of an application for a rehearing in the case of George Martin expelled from Bay View Lodge, No. 159, for misrepresenting his age when joining, the application was denied, as Martin's affidavit was too indefinite.

In response to an inquiry from Justice Lodge of Bakersfield, if a brother suspended for non-payment would be entitled to sit in the Lodge, a decision was rendered that he was entitled until suspended for six months to all the privileges of a M. W., except participation in the Beneficiary Fund in case of death.

In regard to the reinstatement of West Oaley, of Oak Grove Lodge, No. 198, it was decided that a brother need not make personal application to have his certificate reinstated, all necessary being to have arrears paid.

A "Store-Keeper" Who Was "Sound of Limb."

On May 9th, from a reliable source, there came information that one Wm. Solen, about April 20th, applied for admission to San Mateo Lodge, No. 192. His Medical Examiner stated his occupation was "a store keeper," and that he was "sound of limb." Whereas, in fact, he was a saloon keeper, sold "whisky and beer, and nothing else," and had "a wooden leg." The Lodge was addressed, and it replied that Solen joined the Order April 28th; that he lived in Redwood City, and by consent of that Lodge, joined in San Mateo. That he was a saloon keeper, and had his "left leg, between the ankle and knee, crushed by the cars in Nevada, in 1878;" that he had some property; that he was "in sound bodily health, did not drink but very little," and was "a man of good moral standing." That Dr. Windele, of Redwood City Lodge, had examined him, and now admitted that the questions were wrongly answered, and could "not account for the mistake, as he was intimate with Solen, and knew the facts." That Solen was innocent, but would surrender his Beneficiary Certificate if required; and that Dr. Windele wanted a "withdrawal card." The Lodge was directed to dismiss the Doctor as Medical Examiner, but before further action could be had the Doctor left the Order. Solen, upon request of his Lodge, was allowed to retain his membership.

Claim of Mrs. Alpaugh.

Mrs. Nettie Alpaugh wrote to the G. M. W. that her husband was a member of Orland Lodge No. 162, before its disbandment, and before he could make the necessary arrangements to continue his membership, either through Grand Lodge card or otherwise, he was taken sick and died. She desired to know if there could be any arrangement by which she could realize anything on her certificate. On investigation it was found that her husband had been suspended and not reinstated before the suspension of the Lodge charter, so that nothing could be done.

Folsom Lodge By-Law.

It was decided that a member could not be suspended for non-payment of a special assessment, where a Lodge did not live up to its own by-law of having said special assessment notice read twice in open lodge before levying.

Monterey Lodge Medical Examiner.

In the case of Monterey Lodge, which desired to elect a Medical Examiner who held a commission as U. S. Navy Surgeon, but in regular license they were referred to Sec. 3, Article 7, Sub. Lodge Constitution, which required every medical examiner to hold a regular diploma and license.

Decisions.

The following decisions have been rendered:

- I. That a Lodge could not assess its members $7 to pay its debts; that it must be reached by their by-laws being amended.
- II. That a brother has no redress who holds a clearance card if rejected by some other Lodge, and that he retains his membership in the Lodge granting the card.
- III. That in this State "freights and fares, their benefits and drawbacks," was a political subject, and should not be debated.
- IV. That the seal need not be attached to the Financier's assessment notices.
- V. That a Lodge may use its general fund to pay the assessments and dues of a sick or disabled brother.
- VI. That Brother Menish should pay all dues and assessments from May 23, 1883, up to the time his Lodge, Unity, No. 27, was duly notified of the Grand Lodge's order of restoration. See Journal, 1883, page 79.
- VII. That a Lodge shall pay a 50-cent fee for a dispensation for a public installation.
- VIII. That six months' residence is a necessary qualification for membership; but that where an examination has been had, without fraud on the part of the applicant, there should be no part of the medical fee charged to him.
- IX. That the officers of Gualala Lodge, No. 221, instituted Oct. 27, 1882, and meeting twice a month, hold until January, 1884.
- X. That there is no law permitting the installation of officers, at one and the same time, of two different Lodges regularly meeting in different places.
- XI. That Monterey Lodge, No. 98, failing to hold its election at the regular time, and for a reasonable time thereafter, its officers must hold over, and that they are entitled to the semi-annual password.
- XII. That a brother holding a card from another jurisdiction may join here though he is past 50 years, by otherwise complying with the law.
- XIII. That the Degree of Honor Constitution, Section 1, Article 11, fixes the minimum and leaves the amount and time of payment to the subordinate Lodge.
- XIV. That it is lawful for a member to inform an absent member of the business done in the Lodge.

XV.

That an investigating committee writing to a Lodge in regard to a card need not do so under the seal of the Lodge, though it is better that the Recorder should be a member thereof, and that the seal should then be used.

XVI.

That Article 6, Section 2, Subordinate Lodge Constitution, requires that a member to be eligible to the Master Workman's chair must reserve the last half of "the term" next preceding the term for which he desires to be elected Master Workman.

XVII.

That a beneficiary certificate cannot be suspended until the close of the 28th of the month.

XVIII.

That a Degree of Honor or Subordinate Lodge may hold a social under the auspices of the Order on Christmas night or on any legal holiday, except Sunday, and may also have their installation on January 1st.

XIX.

That the Master Workman ought not to hold the office of Trustee.

XX.

That any Past Master Workman may install in the absence of the Grand Master Workman and District Deputy Grand Master Workman.

XXI.

That a Lodge may elect a Medical Examiner from those not members.

XXII.

That after waiting one month a second unfavorable ballot defeats a junior Workman and terminates his connection with the Order.

XXIII.

That a Lodge without any by-laws or special fund or sick fund cannot levy an assessment for the benefit of a sick brother and enforce its payment under a penalty. In such case voluntary contributions must be used to meet our moral obligations until the by-laws provide therefor.

XXIV.

That a householder, "that is one who is the head of a family, keeping a household establishment," may become a surety on the bond of a Lodge officer. [See Section 10, Article 10, Subordinate Constitution, and Section 95, Political Code.]

XXV.

A. was elected a Trustee and gave B. for a bondsman. Within a year B. was elected a Trustee. Heid, that the bond of A. was not thereby void, but voidable. That the Lodge might require of A. a new bond. [Section 11, Article 10, Subordinate Constitution.]

XXVI.

That a resident of another State cannot join a Lodge in this; that, except when controlled by the Supreme Laws, the Grand Lodge is sovereign in its legislation and may require additional qualifications for membership; that six months' residence is essential; that if the Grand Master Workman, by a dispensation, could admit a non-resident member, he might also abrogate the essential of age, or admit a negro or atheist.

Higuera and Olive Lodges.

On my Southern visit, it was found that there were in San Luis Obispo two Lodges, Higuera, No. 194, instituted February 19, 1881, and Olive, No. 212, instituted January 16, 1882. I was officially present in Higuera, and met a delegation from Olive. From talk in and out of the Lodge, I became satisfied that much jealousy existed. The question of consolidation had been discussed. Higuera having a much larger membership, insisted that Olive should surrender its charter, and its members be admitted on cards, and subject to ballot. This Olive declined, and proposed admission as a unit. It is apparent that San Luis Obispo, containing, perhaps, not more than twenty-five hundred people, is not sufficiently large for the healthy and successful occupation and harmonious relationship of two Lodges. The arena is too small for a fraternal competition. Strife is engendered. Where there should be but one Lodge, panoplied in conscious strength, full of love, and graced in beauty, there are two, with antagonisms. Should not this body take action for their consolidation, either under the name of one, or under a new name, with new officers, and new certificates issued to the brothers as members of the new Lodge.

Expert Appointed.

Following the example of Brother Jordan, at the close of his second term, and having the written approval of each of the Grand Trustees, and after a consultation with the Grand Recorder and a part of the Finance Committee, I appointed an expert to examine and make a sworn report of the books, accounts, vouchers, etc., of the Grand Recorder and Grand Receiver, from January 1, 1880, up to March 1, 1884. The duty of selecting a competent person was entrusted to ex-Grand Trustee Ed. Carlson. He designated Julius Blumenthal, a member of San Francisco Lodge, No. 4. This appointment was not made because there was any knowledge, or suspicions, or intimations, that anything was wrong in either office, but because common-sense, business prudence dictated the examination as one of wisdom. We have momentous interests at stake—the security of many a home depends upon us. The whole State is watching us. No doubt is entertained of the integrity of either officer, but where over one million dollars has been handled there are many chances for errors. Our financial standing is our honor. Of this we must be assured. There is no other method, save an outside examination. We must be able to say every cent has been accounted for, and the records show it. It was for the purpose "of making assurance doubly sure" that I felt it my duty to have this work done. The expert's report will be submitted to you, together with his bill. In this connection, allow me to suggest that the Grand Trustees should be chosen with reference to their near residence to San Francisco, and especially their experience and skill as practical accountants. The latter are essential qualifications.

Degree of Honor Lodges.

The Degree of Honor Lodges are still in the dominion of experimentation. They should be encouraged, for no organization is fit for the development of a moral manhood unless it has such elements in its constitution as may win the respect and arouse the energies of a virtuous womanhood. Every man ought to work for the bestowal upon woman of enlarged opportunities, for the exercise of her pure devotion, tender impulses, and moral energies. So far they have been conducted on a social basis; it might be well to incorporate the insurance idea.

Pleasant Relationship.

The memory of pleasant relationships with all of my brother officials demands some slight recognition of their various manly services. Whatever success may have crowned this administration is not due to your servant, but has grown out of the loyalty and unflagging zeal of the entire membership, and more especially out of the energy of the Grand Officers, Deputies and Lodge Masters.

At all times my Deputies have been active workers, and ever alert for new conquests. It would be invidious to individualize the Grand Lodge Officials, though all have ever been ready to respond. Duty compels the mention of Danforth and Reading. They have been picked sentinels, ever guarding our paths of approach, winning new laurels for our Order with their mental powers—keen and brilliant as a Damascus blade. While Pratt, a veteran in service, every neighborhood in the State there are honest hearts sympathizing with the work done.

And now, in conclusion, for the purpose of giving it a more enduring form, and fully realizing that it embodies in song, what has long lingered in the rhythmic impulses and aspirations of every true Workman's soul, fraternity, I close in the magic verse of our gifted brother, Sam Booth, which has already been published in the WATCHMAN.

The Camel in Australia.

We give on this page a portrait of an Australian lady strikingly mounted. Few of our readers are aware of the extent of indebtedness Australia is under to camels. To their exertions and wonderful suitability for desert life is due the successful issue of a large number of the exploring expeditions undertaken into the interior, and, indeed, without their aid the continent we call Australia would yet, for the greater part, be still a terra incognita. The earliest records we have of camels being utilized for exploration purposes in Australia date as far back as 1844, in which year they were employed for the transport of stores to outlying stations. The amazing length of time they can travel without imbibing a drop of water, in conjunction with their recognized capacity as carriers of large and heavy loads, renders them the best adapted of all beasts of burden for the exigencies of that country. South Australia is principally indebted to Sir Thomas Elder for their introduction, and it was mainly due to the services of the camels he introduced that the various exploring parties fitted out by him so well answered the purposes sought. In the far north peerless in his devotion, suave in his manner, positive in his convictions and manly in their maintenance, has stood like the old Roman soldier, steadfast to his post—sublime in his loyalty to the Cæsars, though Vesuvius rained her ashes down.

The Committee on Appeals has been prompt and broadminded in its decisions, following the line of the law under the guidance of the stars of justice and charity.

The Committee on Finance have been "true watchers" of our money affairs, looking with a "detective eye" upon all accounts, etc. It is a hard and thankless duty, and though their labors are unheralded, to the many they are of vast importance to the confidence and stability of our jurisdiction.

"Pacific States Watchman."

To the WATCHMAN every Workman is indebted. It is clean in its morals, cultured in its selection, and manly in its exhibition of brains and taste. It is fit for the cabin, refined for the parlor, instructive to the professional student, and ever welcome to the Lodge room. It has achieved this distinction without one cent from this body. As a recognition of its labors, let us enshrine the memory of its loving work, and offer a benediction for its welfare.

Closing Remarks.

In closing this report, which is very long, and yet as brief as the subject would allow, it is fit to say that the Order shows a steady and healthy growth—one that is flattering, because permanent. I have tried to do my duty, even though it has sacrificed much of my time, and entailed losses. In this work there has been the consolation that the sunlight of truth would sometime reveal my devotion to the trust committed to me; my loyalty to your faith has been constant, and I now return your jewels, trusting they are untarnished in their golden setting. Each star in your crown is still sparkling, while others have been added whose brilliancy is undimmed.

I have devoted all the time to the Order my duty to myself and family would allow, and have received the utmost kindness from the entire membership; and the proudest consolation the office affords, is, that scattered through every neighborhood in the State there are honest hearts sympathizing with the work done.

And now, in conclusion, for the purpose of giving it a more enduring form, and fully realizing that it embodies in song, what has long lingered in the rhythmic impulses and aspirations of every true Workman's soul, fraternity, I close in the magic verse of our gifted brother, Sam Booth, which has already been published in the WATCHMAN.

same number could be purchased in their native country and be carried across the two oceans for.

Thus it appears that we bid fair to lose our camels and contribute to the camel stock of Australia. But it seems that Mr. Shirley has to capture the animals first, and if the Apaches don't capture him, may finally secure a portion of them, and leave enough for the camel hunters of the future.

Household Hints.

Jam.

M. Emilie de Laveleye concerning the jam question: "In Mr. Gladstone's recent speech to his tenants at Hawarden, he spoke, I think, with great truth, of the high worth of jam for both its producers and consumers. It may be said in agriculture ex minimis magnum. The smallest things, whether fruit, eggs or poultry, may become capable of producing millions upon millions. I think the jam question is nowhere better understood than in the neighborhood of Liege, where a sort of jam called 'sirop' is made from apples and pears, and is sold for about ninety cents the kilo (rather less than fourpence a pound). The working classes eat it instead of butter on their bread, and all servants eat it, but in addition to butter. It has a very agreeable flavor, and for my own part, I prefer it to all other preserves. All children are exceedingly fond of it. It is made without any sugar, simply by simmering the juice of pears and apples on a slow fire until they attain the consistency of a thick jam, and have become dark brown in color. As this sirop improves by keeping, it would be invaluable in long sea voyages. It has a slightly acid taste, which is very pleasant and stimulates the appetite. It would be a great boon to the working classes if they could accustom themselves to eat this sirop, which costs but 4d a pound, instead of butter, dripping or lard. And if its use could be introduced on board ship—as would probably be the case if it were once to become known—an opening would be made for the consumption of an almost limitless production of fruit. Hence both agricultural laborers and the working classes would be benefited."

BROILED BEEF STEAKS.—Ingredients—Steaks, a piece of butter the size of a walnut, salt to taste, one tablespoonful of good catsup. Mode.—The success of a good broil depends on the state of the fire, which should be bright and clear and perfectly free from smoke. Do not add any fresh fuel just before the gridiron is to be used. Sprinkle a little salt over the fire, put on the gridiron for a few minutes, to get thoroughly hot; rub it with a piece of fresh suet to prevent the meat from sticking, and lay on the steaks, cut of equal thickness, about three-quarters of an inch, or rather thinner, beating them with a rolling pin when likely to be tough, but not otherwise. Turn frequently with steak tongs (if these are not at hand stick a fork in the edge of the fat that no gravy escapes), and in from eight to ten minutes the steaks will be done. Have ready a very hot dish, into which put the ketchup, and, when liked, a little minced onion; dish up the steaks, rub fresh dripping over them, and season with pepper and salt. The exact time for broiling must be determined by taste, whether they are liked underdone or well done; more than from eight to ten minutes for a steak one-quarter inch in thickness, we think, would spoil and dry up the juices of the meat.

TO USE COLD BOILED SALMON.—Pick the cold salmon in nice pieces and put in a glass jar. Make a pickle with vinegar according to the quantity of fish, and for each pint of vinegar use three blades of mace, half a dozen each of whole allspice and cloves, half a teaspoonful of pepper and the same of made mustard, and a teaspoonful of white sugar; bring all to a boil and pour over the fish in the jar. Seal up at once. This makes a nice luncheon or supper dish. If there is only a little simply place it in a vegetable dish, cover with the pickle and set aside until wanted. It will keep a week this way in a cool place. Or you may cover what is left with a mayonnaise and serve for next day's dinner.

HARD GINGERBREAD.—Three pounds of flour, 1½ pounds of brown sugar, one pound of butter, one teaspoonful of ginger, half a teaspoonful of caraway seeds. Take half the flour, all of the sugar, butter and eggs, beat them together much as you would pound cake, add the remainder of flour, ginger and seeds, roll on a tin sheet and cut into squares or fanciful shapes. Brown sugar will make this crisp and nice. If you use white it will be tough and leathery. This recipe is 100 years old.

CUSTARD FOR PUDDINGS AND FRUIT PIES.—Heat in a saucepan till nearly boiling a pint of new milk. Beat together in a basin the yolks of two eggs, a little cream and some pulverized loaf sugar. Over these pour the hot milk, and then pour it from the basin into the saucepan and back again until thoroughly mixed. Lastly, stir it over the fire till nearly boiling. Serve it in a glass dish, with nutmeg grated over the top.

WHITE MUFFINS.—Delicate white muffins are made of one cup of sweet milk, the well-beaten whites of two eggs, 2½ cups of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, a piece of butter the size of an egg. Bake in a quick oven.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Lecture Course of Golden Dawn, No. 10.
D. of H.

Our Degree of Honor Lodges seem to be taking the lead of late in this city in affairs of progress. A most laudable project is that of Golden Dawn in inaugurating a course of popular lectures in Excelsior Hall, for the benefit of the library of Excelsior Lodge, No. 126. The first of the series was given last Thursday evening, by Rev. A. S. Fiske—the first P. M. W., of Excelsior Lodge, when he, by special request, repeated his splendid lecture on "Work and Play." This will be followed, May 25th, by Mr. S. A. White, Principal of the Valencia Grammar school, formerly a distinguished member of the same Lodge, who will lecture on "Improvements About Our Hearths and Homes," or "The Old Times and the New." The third lecture will be on "The Drama and the Stage," May 29th, by Mr. Walter M. Leman, whose eminent qualifications, intimate acquaintance and long association with his subject, peculiarly fit him for presenting it in a popular and attractive manner, due announcement of which will be made. Admission to the first and last is put at 25 cents to defray expenses, the proceeds over which will be devoted to embellishing and furnishing the library room. The second lecture will be free. Sam Booth is the manager. A brother writes concerning this project as follows: "An attempt is hereby being made to inaugurate in our new hall at a nominal cost a system of first-class lectures, which, if successful, will be followed by others equally edifying and attractive, thus introducing a Lyceum for the instruction and entertainment of the brethren—and their families—meeting here."

Fidelity, No. 136.

This thrifty Lodge has moved to its new and elegant Lodge rooms in Red Men's building, Post street.

Friendship, No. 179.

On Wednesday evening, the 23d inst., Brother Watson, Deputy Grand Recorder, paid Friendship a visit. The M. W. degree was conferred on two candidates in a manner that called for congratulations from Brother Watson. There was a good attendance, and this growing subordinate is especially fortunate in its corps of officers for this term.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

A recent visit to the old mother Lodge disclosed a prosperous and harmonious state of affairs, and a pleasant meeting. Under the head Good of the Order remarks were made by Brothers Hollywood, Berdan Wilkinson Donahue, M. W., the WATCHMAN representative and others. This Lodge recently paid a fraternal visit to Occidental, No. 6, when a very pleasant evening was spent. The degrees were conferred in No. 6's faultless style, and the work was exemplified by (then) Deputy Grand Master Danforth.

Occidental, No. 6.

This West Oakland Lodge gave an entertainment and ball at Huseur Hall last Wednesday evening. The character of the entertainment may be outlined from the following quotation from their invitations, all the promises in which were well kept: "The reputation of our entertainments is well known, they having always met with due approval and satisfaction by those who favored us with their presence. On this occasion the committee have taken great pains to make it more enjoyable than any heretofore given. Good talent has been engaged; among others, the S. F. Zither Club will favor us with their well-known and always appreciated music, which in itself will be a treat. Good music has been engaged for dancing until 2 A. M." The following were the committees: Reception—J. F. W. Bahls, J. A. Hall, J. J. Schutz, P. M. W., H. Garthorn, Will G. Hawkett, P. M. W. Floor—W. Pirrie, P. M. W., J. Mitchell, L. Golly, J. Woodhall. Floor Manager, F. R. Weigle, M. W. Arrangements—O. Walter, J. Kitchen, V. Stein, D. S. Moulton, P. M. W., F. Hammer, P. M. W.

Industry, No. 63.

We enjoyed a pleasant meeting with this Lodge last Thursday evening. Located in the pretty little town of Pleasanton, 40 miles from San Francisco, it is quite a delightful trip to make at this time of the year. Neither the town nor the Lodge belie their names, for the town is surely pleasant and the Lodge is composed of workers—not a drone in the hive. Dr. Bass, the M. W., had been called away on professional duties on the evening in question and his place was filled by Brother H. F. Grasser, the Foreman. Brother I. G. Jackson has been elected Recorder vice Brother Merwin, removed from town. Among those who helped make the meeting interesting were Brothers H. Detjens, Receiver, and J. R. Palmer, P. M. W., an attorney of the place who gave the WATCHMAN a very complimentary notice. The Lodge numbers over 48 members, is in good working order and received one member by deposit of card on the evening we were there. It also has an application on hand, and probably more coming.

Ashler, No. 165.

This Alameda Lodge was recently engaged in one of its periodical "high jinks," and the fun was waxing fast and furious, when a jangle of alarm bells broke up the flow of soul and quickly dispersed the boys to several hours' work with the "fire fiend" not far away, for be it known that most of the ladies here "run mid de méshien," and are ever ready to leave fun for duty when called.

COLUSA COUNTY.

Colusa, No. 68.

Our agent, John H. Sturcke, writes as follows in relation to a recent trip to Colusa county: "While in said county I had the pleasure of meeting among many other members of our noble Order, Brother E. A. Bridgford, Judge of the Superior Court, Brother Jackson Hatch, Brothers Miller, Angell and Dasheils, and Brother Wilton P. Craig, the new Deputy of this district. All speak in glowing terms of, and predict a bright future for the A. O. U. W. and its official organ, the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN. Brother Craig promises to do much in advancing the interests of his district, and your representative has cause to believe that with our able brother at the helm, the good ship Charity will be safely piloted into that haven of Protection which Hope ever nerves us to attain."

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

Point of Timber, No. 92.

Point of Timber Lodge, No. 92, located near Byron, celebrated its fourth anniversary Monday evening, the 14th inst. Notwithstanding the terrible condition of the roads says the Call, and a dark rainy night, a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen were present. Dr. Dougherty, M. W., presided, and gave an interesting historical sketch of the Lodge. An address was delivered by William H. Barnes, P. G. M., and a ball and supper concluded the evening. No. 92 now has 40 members, and several applications on hand.

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.

Stockton, No. 23.

On Friday evening, the 11th inst., a WATCHMAN representative called on the brethren of Stockton. But a small membership of their own Lodge was present, but there were quite a number of visiting Workmen. Brothers Carter and Isaac, of Nevada City, were present and made some pleasant remarks. Brother Frank Frates, M. W. of Lone Valley Lodge, No. 141, gave a succinct history of his Lodge, and also alluded to the bright prospects in store for them as a Lodge. He said: "We conferred the M. W. degree on five at our last meeting, and will have eight candidates for this month." Brother Taylor and others, of Stockton Lodge, had some kind words for their guests, which closed a very pleasant though short meeting.

NEVADA.

Esmeralda, No. 15.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—As you appear willing to publish communications from different Lodges, I therefore came to the conclusion to drop you a few lines about the workings of Esmeralda Lodge, No. 15. This Lodge was two years old last Saturday night, April 12th, and we celebrated our anniversary by a dance, which was kept up until 12 o'clock midnight, after which all went home pleased with the grand affair. This is the second dance this Order has given in this town, and it has never failed to be a success. Although this is a town of only about 250 inhabitants, at the same time we are over 40 strong in good standing. Last Monday evening we conferred the J. W. degree on two new members, and next Monday evening we expect to confer the same degree on one more. It is true that we might do considerably faster work in growing, but we are very careful about our material. Our present Master Workman, F. Corkil reached his office by going through the chairs, and makes a very good officer. Our foreman, Henry Munter, is very attentive to business, and when our Master Workman is unable to attend our meeting, which is on two nights in each month, the Foreman gets into practice by taking his place. Our Overseer, Fred Sears, has only missed meetings twice since elected. Our Recorder, Wm. H. Kent, has not as yet been found out in any mistakes in his minutes, although this is his second term, and so far he has been very attentive to his business. Our Financier, J. T. Jones, is the best one we ever had since this Lodge was organized, and is always at his post. Our Receiver, E. M. Gross, is a very good officer. He holds on to the Lodge funds very well. We therefore are very well fixed for finances at present. The most important mine which we have in the district has not been working for six months, and we don't know what to do with our money, but as soon as this camp starts up we expect to build a hall of our own, which will cost about $2,500. Our Guide, Wm. H. Thomas, is very active in his duties. Our Inside Watchman, C. P. Willson, has missed but one meeting. Our Outside Watchman, N. Davey, is always on hand. We are having splendid attendance at every meeting and keeping it up, never closing our Lodge before 10 o'clock. That makes it quite a pleasant pastime for us. Since this Lodge was organized we have had three deaths. Although at first our members came in very uncertainly, yet after the payments of $2,000 were made to each heir in a very short time after their death, the public changed their opinion about our Order being merely a nothing, and they are now very willing to join us, providing we are willing to take them in. Our Grand Lodge meets in May. We have elected the following Representatives: Past Masters T. J. Harrington, G. L. Albright and Wm. T. Mattingley. Each one of them is well equipped in this Order, and we hope that Esmeralda Lodge, No. 15, will be able to boast about their eloquence on their return, as they are all able men in this respect. Your paper is well circulated among the brothers here, and the expectations are that if it keeps up its lick it will double here in its circulation before another month passes. Yours fraternally in C. H. and P., X.

Candelaria, Nev., April 19th.

[We are always glad to publish correspondence from the Nevada Lodges as well as those of any other part of the coast. Our paper aims to be in deed as well as in name, the WATCHMAN of the "Pacific States" (Territories also included), and if our brethren from all over the coast will only do as well as "X" has, we are sure we can make a very good showing in Lodge Locals from afar off, as well as near at hand.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

UTAH.

Ontario, No. 1.

This Lodge located at Park City has had rather a peculiar case on its hands recently. Brother White of this Lodge was killed by an accident on the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad. Shortly previous to his death he was declared suspended for non-payment of assessment. Subsequently, however, it was ascertained that by a mistake in keeping the books of the Lodge, he had not been properly credited with the full amount that he had paid and his account was found to be square. The case was submitted to the Grand Master Workman who turned it over for decision to the next Grand Lodge. If the above as stated by our informant, are the facts in the case, it seems very clear that the brother's certificate should be immediately paid, and we wonder that it was not so decided by the G. M. W.

Good Fellowship, No. 6.

A brother writing from this Lodge, located at Silver Reef, says: "Less than 14 months ago our Lodge was instituted with a charter membership of 29, since which it has steadily increased until the roll shows that initiates have swelled the number to 86. This has, however, been decreased by withdrawals (in most instances to join other Lodges), leaving a present membership of 76. When it is considered that this number is drawn from a total population of less than 1,200 souls, our popularity as an Order may be plainly seen. It is safe to say, further, that the enthusiasm of the members is in keeping with the Lodge's rapid growth, if promptness in all good works and fidelity to the noble precepts of the Order are a true criterion. Good Fellowship can point with pride to its tastefully and appropriately furnished and decorated Lodge room and library of well selected current literature, that inspire intellect and build about the Order walls of confidence; features, too, which many of the sister Lodges would do well to emulate. As is not always the case with innovations, this Lodge got started right, and has kept right, and consequently it is not strange that it has brought to its fraternal abode all the best eligible citizens of the community. Its weekly reunions at the Lodge room have a perceptible influence upon the social state of society, and no doubt tend to break down many of the rough places encountered in life's pathway."

[Correspondence is always welcomed from this and all other Lodges in the State or Territories under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Nevada.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

THE Canada Grand Lodge has resolved unanimously to reduce the age limit of this Order to 45 years, and now asks the Supreme Lodge to ratify the judgment.

SMALL miseries, like small debts, hit us in so many places and meet us at so many turns and corners, that what they want in weight they make up in number, and render it less hazardous to stand one cannon ball than a volley of bullets.—Colton.

AN Athenian, who lacked eloquence, but, who was very brave, when another had in a long and brilliant speech promised great affairs, got up and said, "Men of Athens, all that he has said, I will do."

Supreme Representative's Report.

To the Grand Master, Officers and Brothers of the Grand Lodge:

BRETHREN:—Custom and the laws of this Grand Lodge render it compulsory for your Representative to make a report to you at this convocation, touching his stewardship at the Eleventh Annual Session of the Supreme Lodge, which was held in the city of Buffalo, New York, on the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of June last.

It was a matter of regret to me, as it was undoubtedly to you all, that those whom you had chosen as my colleagues were prevented by various causes from attending the session. Were this but a small jurisdiction, having only a feeble voice in the deliberations of the Supreme Law making body of the Order, it might not seem amiss to send a single Representative to express our wishes and discharge the diminished responsibilities of that position; but when it is considered that California is, in point of numbers, next to the largest jurisdiction in the entire Order, casting last June not less than 15, and now entitled to 16, votes as a Grand Lodge, and constituting a most powerful faction in the making and unmaking of laws for the government of more than 130,000 Workmen, it will be realized that to place this responsibility upon the shoulders of one Representative is doing a great injustice both to him, ourselves and the Supreme Lodge. Wisely do our laws provide that three States shall be set apart to each Grand Lodge in the council chamber of the highest tribunal of the Order, that in the direction of legislation affecting that body there may be no lack of wisdom. Twice only in the history of this jurisdiction has the Grand Lodge been so represented, and it is to be devoutly hoped that henceforth our delegation may be full, and every voice and vote to which we are lawfully entitled be secured.

As your Representative I arrived in Buffalo on the afternoon of June 4th, and responded to the Supreme Lodge roll-call on the following morning, nor did I absent myself from that body until its setting was finally closed on the evening of the 9th.

The proceedings of each day were marked with that same pleasant harmony which has ever characterized the deliberations of that Lodge, which was shown, or encouraged, in the consideration of its business which was not in keeping with all the interests and high character of its legislation, and when a final adjournment was had we separated with the pleasant feeling that all had been done that was in our power to promote the welfare of our beloved order.

At your last session you adopted a resolution directing your Representatives to endeavor to secure the passage of a law granting a rehearing to a person expelled from the Order under a misapprehension of facts. This resolution, as duly certified by our Grand Recorder, I presented to the Supreme Lodge, by whom it was referred to the committee on Laws, who reported accordingly. Against this report I made an earnest and determined effort, which I am pleased to say, resulted in the non-approval of the Committee and the adoption of the desired legislation.

The action of this Lodge in the case of R. Pengally and V. Engle, which were brought before the Supreme Lodge on appeal, I must report to you to have been reversed, as you will find by reference to the printed proceedings.

The following amendments and alterations in the Laws of the Order were duly adopted.

Resolved, That the standing rule requiring that all propositions to change, amend or alter the Constitution and Laws of the Supreme Lodge shall be forwarded to the Supreme Recorder at least three days before the time fixed, etc., as appears at page 633, and the same is hereby repealed.

Section 13. Any member holding a final card, desiring re-admission to the Order, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission to membership, and shall comply with all the conditions necessary thereto, except that he shall be exempt from the payment of initiation and degree fees, but shall pay the usual fee required of members admitted by card.

Any member suspended from the Order by reason of the non-payment of dues for the period of six months, desiring to be reinstated, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission to membership, and shall comply with all the conditions necessary thereto, except that he shall be exempt from the payment of initiation or degree fees. He shall pay a sum not less than seven dollars, which amount shall be placed in the Beneficiary Fund. Upon the completion of such re-admission or reinstatement, the Recorder shall immediately notify the Grand or Supreme Recorder thereof. In the case of rejection the amounts above specified shall be returned to the applicant.

The form of application for a Beneficiary Certificate was amended by adding in the third paragraph after the word "order" the following: "And until my medical examination has been approved by the Supreme or Grand Medical Examiner or Examining Board."

Relative to the manner of changing the direction of payment in a Beneficiary Certificate, an amendment was adopted providing that the necessary attestation could be made by a Notary Public or an officer of a Court of Record where it is impracticable for the Recorder to witness the change.

Section 8, Article 8, Supreme Lodge Constitution, was amended so as to require second notices of assessment to be sent to the Master Workman, Foreman, Recorder and District Deputy, if there be one, of the Lodge in arrears.

A resolution was adopted requiring the Master Workman to ask in open Lodge (on the first Monday of each month) the question, "Has the last beneficiary assessment been duly forwarded to the Grand or Supreme Lodge?"

The law relating to separated jurisdictions was amended so as to provide for compulsory separation when a Grand Lodge has a membership of 3,000.

Under this law Ohio became a separate beneficiary jurisdiction on the 1st day of September.

Section 19. Laws applicable in Grand Lodges was also amended so as to permit the Past Masters degree to be conferred upon a Grand Medical Examiner who had served as much for our full term and is a Master Workman in good standing in his Subordinate Lodge.

The remodeling and revising of the digest of the laws of the Order was ordered and the work was committed to the care of Brother Leroy Andrus, of New York, from whose careful and experienced pen we shall hope soon to receive the complete work.

This jurisdiction was honored by the appointment of your Representative as Chairman of the Committee on Good of the Order, and still later in the session by the most gratifying elevation of our Brother M. W. Fish, to the Chair of Supreme Master. By this act we believe that the Supreme Lodge has not only recognized in our distinguished Brother the repository of those qualities of mind and heart which eminently fit him for the discharge of the duties of that high office, but it has also recognized this jurisdiction as among the most potent, loyal and enthusiastic of those that year by year send their representatives to its councils.

The visit of the members of the Supreme Lodge to the wonderful Falls of Niagara, and their entertainment in magnificent parts of the city of Buffalo were among the many pleasurable occurrences of the session, and contributions to that enthusiastic mingling of heart and hand which characterized the closing scenes of the session.

Thanking you for the honor which you have again conferred upon me in my selection as one of your sponsors in this important body, and trusting that my acts have met with your approbation, I am as heretofore,

Ever in fraternal bonds,

WILLIAM H. JORDAN,

Representative to the Supreme Lodge.

Annual Report of Grand Medical Examiner.

OFFICE OF GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER, )
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal. April 1, 1884. )

To the Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of the State of California—BRETHREN:—The change adopted at the last session of the Grand Lodge of substituting a Grand Medical Examiner for an Examining Board was carried into effect by my appointment in May, 1883. I entered upon the discharge of my duties on the 1st of June and herewith submit a report of my official acts since that date until the 23d of March, 1884.

Previous to my appointment, during the months of April and May, the Examining Board passed upon 268 applications, of which 18 were rejected for causes specified hereafter. From the 1st of June 1883, to the 23d of March 1884, I examined and passed upon 1,695 applications of which 105 were rejected for the reasons subjoined:

Rejections.

Irregular action of the heart, 10; predisposition to consumption, 14; unfavorable family history, 7; irreducible hernia, 2; chest expansion too small, 1; hemorrhage of the lungs, 2; hemorrhage of the stomach, 2; scrofula, 2; chronic rheumatism, 1; physical constitution feeble, 2; renal colic, 1; valvular disease of heart, 2; respiration slow and irregular, 1; fistula, 1; asthma, 2; frequency of pulse, 5; excessive weight, 4; previous dissipation, 2; chronic diarrhoea, 1; chronic cystitis, 1; over age, 2; hazardous occupation (acid maker,) 1; enlargement of heart, 1; excessive drinking (intoxication,) 14; habitual, and daily use of intoxicating liquors, 18; engaged in liquor trade and daily drinkers, 24.

I have scrutinized every application closely and accepted no risk that was not fully up to the standard, and when there was any doubt I always gave the benefit of it to the Order. So far, we have been fortunate, as not a single death from disease has occurred amongst those passed upon, and only one from any cause.

The number of rejections, six and one-fifth per cent, may seem large, but there would have been very many less had the Lodge Medical Examiners made themselves more familiar with the Manual of Instruction to Medical Examiners, and been governed by the suggestions it contains—hardly a single rejection has been made that is not strictly in accordance with the rules contained therein.

Intoxicants.

In rejecting such a large number for inebriety and declining to accept others from their proximity to alcoholic liquors, or on account of the temptation to intemperance which such exposure and association offers, as well as the risk to life from the quarrels of inebriates, I feel fully justified by the special and peremptory instructions to Medical Examiners promulgated by the Grand Lodge in 1880 (see pages 18 and 19 Instructions to Medical Examiners on this subject).

Beer.

The universally expressed opinion of the medical and scientific world on this question is unanimous in considering the daily drinker an unsafe risk. While the use of whiskey and the stronger alcoholic liquors is looked upon as injurious, beer is considered by many harmless, and its daily use as a beverage supposed to promote rather than shorten longevity. The President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of Connecticut, has been investigating this subject for years, with the object of determining its effect upon the health and life of the individual, and the result arrived at by him confirms the opinion held by the medical profession, viz.: that for a time its pernicious effects are little observable, but in a few years the mortality amongst beer drinkers becomes astounding. It is peculiarly deceptive in its effects at first, but thoroughly destructive at last.

In making this report I am not seeking to be considered a temperance advocate, but discharging what I consider my duty to the Order in warning the Medical Examiners and placing this subject before them in its proper light.

The rejections for threatened pulmonary and cardiac troubles, with an unfavorable family history, figure largely in the result, but the great number of deaths in our Order from inherited tendencies warned me to carefully guard against accepting anyone with the slightest tendency to those diseases which proved fatal to their progenitors.

Deaths.

The total number of deaths from January 1, 1883, to March 23, 1884, were 182, from the following causes, viz.: Accidental, 28; brain fever, 7; disease of bladder, 2; stricture of throat, 2; inflammation of bowels, 6; typhoid pneumonia, 5; paralysis, 2; rupture of artery, 1; typhoid fever, 1; disease of kidneys, 7; inflammation of throat, 1; blood poisoning, 1; cancer, 6; pleurisy, 1; heart disease, 14; pneumonia, 18; consumption, 33; scrofula, 4; inflammation of liver, 3; softening of brain, 3; erysipelas, 2; diabetes, 3; apoplexy, 4; abscess of brain, 3; dropsy, 2; inanition, 1; rupture of urethra, 1; congestion of lungs, 2; cirrhosis of liver, 2; hemorrhage of stomach, 1; asphyxia, 1; contraction of windpipe, 1; amputation of limb, 1; asthma, 1; insanity, 1; murdered, 1; congestive chill, 1; hemorrhage of bowels, 2.

To All Medical Examiners in this jurisdiction

The large number of deaths from diseases of the heart and lungs, 74—over forty per cent of the whole number, speaks in thunder tones to the Medical Examiners to be thorough and searching in their examinations,—no less than 33 deaths from consumption, a chronic disease usually slow in its progress, would indicate a degree of either incompetency or carelessness which ought not to exist.

I would recommend to the Medical Examiners a repeated and careful study of the Instructions to Medical Examiners issued by the Grand Lodge of this state; their correctness and importance was valued so highly by the Supreme Medical Examiner, Dr. Richardson, that he issued and adopted them as Instruction to Medical Examiners of the Order throughout the United States. I feel certain if the Medical Examiners of this State will be governed by the instructions they contain, there will be fewer rejections by the Grand Medical Examiner and a large diminution in the number of deaths from hereditary influence, and diseases of the Thoracic Cavity.

In my efforts to secure Medical Examiners of undoubted standing in the profession as well as exclude or weed out those that were doubtful, I insisted upon a strict compliance with the Law requiring each Medical Examiner to file a certificate of his license to practice medicine under the State Law, with the Grand Recorder before recognizing his examinations.

To Lodges Choosing Medical Examiners.

The law regarding the selection of Medical Examiners by the Lodges seems to be imperfectly understood, or, if comprehended, too frequently disregarded. There is no doubt it was intended to confine the choice of the Lodge to those qualified medical men in the Order, who were in good standing—by preference, members of the Lodge, if it contained such, but never permitting the selection of an examiner outside of the Order when a brother member was available. I would recommend a strict observance of the rule, as all departures from it are illegal and likely to create discord as well as work an injury to the Order.

To examine for life insurance requires education, study and training in this branch of the profession, the varied effects of occupation heredity, habits, etc., upon longevity—the truthfulness of the applicant's answers—all these, with much more have to be considered in determining the character of the risk. The knowledge is largely acquired by practice in making examinations, and every year's experience adds to the ability and usefulness of the examiner. For these reasons I would advise the Lodges to change their Medical Examiners as seldom as possible, making retention in office the reward for services faithfully performed. Frequent changes of Medical Examiner by any Lodge, without obvious reasons, ought to be looked upon with suspicion. The friends of rejected candidates may create a feeling of hostility to the Examiner, and try to displace him on some other pretext, concealing their real motive. Should such a thing occur, it is to be hoped some one will find it out and expose it, so that all such attempts may be defeated, and the Medical Examiner sustained in the honest and fearless discharge of a duty, so necessary to the prosperity of the Order.

I intended publishing in this report the occupation of deceased members, but find the data furnished by our Order is yet too limited to be of much value. The mortality among different trades varies, being largest among miners, bakers, butchers, saloon-keepers, etc. I expect in the future the influence of occupation upon longevity will be still further illustrated from the information collected by the A. O. U. W. on this important subject.

It affords me pleasure to testify to the competency of the Medical Examiners, and to thank them for their courtesy and kindness towards me. With few exceptions they are faithful and conscientious in the discharge of their duty. Their office is a most important and responsible one. Guarding the entrance to the Order, their fidelity and skill contributes materially to its perpetuity. As such responsibilities are confided to their care, they should receive all the honors and be liberally paid, yet, at the same time, held strictly accountable for every risk accepted which time shows ought to have been rejected.

I have considered it my duty to investigate every death occurring from chronic or organic disease within a limited time after admission to the Order, to discover, if possible, whether the Medical Examiner was at fault in recommending a beneficiary certificate. My right to do so has been rather questioned, and, I regret to say, in consequence the result has not been satisfactory. I mention this so that in future the members of the Order will consider it one of the most important duties of the Grand Medical Examiner to make such inquiries.

In conclusion, I have to thank the Recorders of the various Lodges and the members of the Order for the information furnished me from time to time—the Grand Master for his kind words of confidence and encouragement. Particularly have I to express my gratitude to the Grand Recorder for the benefit of his experience and knowledge of the laws and customs of the Order. From day to day this has been freely given to help me through many difficulties and make the administration of my office pleasant and agreeable.

Trusting the Order may continue to grow and flourish in the future as in the past, I remain, fraternally yours, JAS. SIMPSON, M. D.,
Grand Medical Examiner for California.

The Relief Committee.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—It is really too bad the Grand Lodge did not see fit to recognize the importance of the Relief Committee of the A. O. U. W. of this city, composed as it is of true brothers and members from each Lodge in this city, and maintained as it has been by the receipts once in a year from a picnic. That a vast amount of assistance has been rendered to unfortunate brothers from afar off is well-known by all of us here in the city, and the benefits have to a great extent gone to what we might term strangers to us. Then see the vast number of places of employment that have been secured by this committee, not alone for strangers, but for our brothers here at home. Now, what will become of this benevolent feature of the A. O. U. W.? Shall we let it die as long as there is a tendency among any of the noble ones who have ever stood ready to give their time and labor for its good? No, the city Lodges with 6,000 members should stand by and guard its helm. The unwritten work teaches us to help and assist brothers who may be out of employment, and for this if for no other cause should it be continued. Let each city Lodge contribute a little. Let us maintain an open bureau of employment, that everyone may know where good Workmen can be employed, and where those out of employment may register, that they may be helped. A MEMBER OF THE A. O. U. W.

WASHINGTON, No. 60.—At the last meeting of this solid Lodge, Bro. H. B. Keessing, one of our young Workmen, and a native of California, was elected Overseer.

THE Grand Lodge of Illinois recognizes the Anchor and Shield as its official organ to the extent of $600 per year. Rather substantial recognition.

A. O. U. W. LODGE DIRECTORY.

Joining Workmen will find this Directory valuable for reference. It will enable all who visit different places to obtain the names of the Lodges in the districts they visit. Let no good brother who can visit a Lodge when possible. Attend as many different Lodges as you can, and you will be paid for so doing every time, brothers.

Cards inserted in this list at the rate of 25 cents per month, payable semi-annually in advance. If errors or omissions are noticed, please write the office direct.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS U. S. and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

BALING PRESS. John D. Page, Sanders Fresno Co. No. 295,672. Dated March 25, 1884. This invention relates to a new and useful baling press, and to certain improvements herein, consisting in a peculiar screw-shaped feeder and compressor, and in a guiding follower against which the feeder constantly presses the material until baled. The object of the invention is to provide a baling press in which the material shall be fed to good advantage, and be subjected to pressure throughout the entire operation, whereby a better and firmer bale may be made; and further, to make an effective and economical device. The material is fed in through apertures, and the feeder being revolved, it twists and feeds it down into the chamber against the spring follower, which is held continuously against it. As more material is screwed in by the compressor the follower recedes, and naturally its pressure increases until the bale is well packed and is ready for discharge through the side or top.

COUPLING FOR CAR-HEATING APPARATUS.—John J. Lacey, S. F., assignor to Lacey Automatic Coupling Co., Oakland. No. 295,255. Dated March 18, 1884. This invention relates to a means for heating cars from a detached or distant source of supply without the presence of fire in the cars, and it consists principally of a joint or coupling for pipes, extending beneath the cars, so constructed as to be automatically connected, and a passage opened throughout the whole length whenever two cars come together, and are coupled, thus enabling the inventor to convey steam, hot air or other suitable medium into heaters placed in each car throughout the train. The hot air or steam is conveyed from the engine, or a special source.

This invention relates to a new and useful machine for casting the leads or sinkers on the lines which go to form fish nets; and it consists in a peculiar reel or winch upon which the line is wound, and having its circumference constructed to form one-half the matrix in which the line lies, and a projecting arm under which the reel passes forming the other half. It consists, also, in the means for conducting the molten metal into the matrix and cutting it off, and the means for clamping the two parts together during the casting.

BOILER SCRAPER.—Joseph Beare, Tombstone, Arizona. No. 295,854. Dated March 25, 1884. ## To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Good of the Order.

At the conclusion of the recent Grand Lodge session, the principle officers present, both active and retired, were called upon for remarks under the head of "Good of the Order," and the result was a number of very interesting, short speeches, received with warm applause, synopses of which we are glad to be able to present our readers herewith. It was a "love feast" throughout, rendered to a great extent by the key-note of practical, true brotherhood, struck by Brother Jordan, in presenting to the Grand Lodge for future preservation in its archives, a valuable memento of the unalloyed fraternity existing then as now, among our membership during the yellow fever days of the South, when Workmanship in our State was but an infant, yet a vigorous one and endowed with that generosity which has never yet shown signs of waning.

Dr. M. W. Fish, S. M. W.

Grand Master Workmen and Brethren: I regret that professional duties have unavoidably detained me to-day so that I have but just entered the hall and am not informed of what has been done on this last day of this important session. I have attended every session of this Grand Lodge, and I cannot refrain at this moment from glancing backward along the road by which it has advanced with such rapid pace and such wonderful success. At its first session in Kohler's Hall, Oakland, ever memorable to California Workmen, I was elected one of the representatives to the Supreme Lodge, and have attended every session since that time. The only one found willing and able to attend, I took my seat in that body with extreme diffidence, unused as I was to the duties laid upon me. New in this Order and in all Fraternal Orders, unknown to all, and representing a constituency of less than half a thousand far away on the very verge of the continent, I was content to be a listener and learner among my brothers. Since that day of small things, what changes this Grand Lodge has seen, and how our loved Order has grown and crystallized into beauty until it has become a joy unto thousands of mourning hearts! Among the fair members of the household, none is fairer, better, purer than the one born on these golden shores, second only to one in numerical strength, and second to none in kind words and good deeds, in unwavering loyalty to the supreme head of the Order. Let California Workmen here resolve that our jurisdiction shall ever remain true to the principles of our Order, and our fair name remain untarnished by a single act unworthy of our beginning.

One word more, if I may be allowed a suggestion in this closing hour of this harmonious session. It is this: Cultivate a lively affectionate interest in the good of the whole Order; keep informed of what is transpiring in other jurisdictions; see to it that the fires are kept brightly burning on her altars wherever created, whether on the shores of the Atlantic or the Pacific, whether in the sunny South or frozen North. Let our mystic trinity, Charity, Hope and Protection, move our hearts, heads and hands to deeds of love and brotherly kindness, and finally let us ever remember, amid sunshine or storms, in prosperity or adversity, that we are a united brotherhood.

William H. Jordan, P. G. M. W.

Grand Master and Brethren:—At the suggestion of several of the brethren here, I have reserved for this occasion the pleasure of presenting to you for permanent preservation in the archives of this Grand Lodge what, to my mind, is one of the most valuable mementoes of our history.

Many of you still vividly remember the harrowing scenes that, in the year of 1878, blackened the homes of our brethren in the Valley of the Mississippi. It was then that the dread scourge, yellow fever, threw its dark drapery of death over mansion and hamlet throughout all the southern limits of that beautiful valley, and where prosperity, mirth and gladness had been wont to reign supreme, there came up to us of the North a cry, a piercing cry of unfathomable woe such as the world has seldom heard in all the annals of the past. In the early days of this terrible affliction the rumor reached us that the Grand Master of Workmen in Tennessee had issued a call for aid addressed to all Workmen throughout America, and, acting upon the impulse of the moment, I at once, as Grand Master of California, telegraphed him to draw upon me at sight for $500, and authorizing him to repeat the draft thirty days from date, should there still be need of help. In due course of mail the draft came, and, as you will remember, was fully met by the generous contributions from the various Lodges of this State.

Some two years after the occurrence of which I speak, I chanced to visit, in company with P. G. M. W. Brewer, Metropolitan Lodge, in New York City. Every seat in their large hall was filled, and after the Master had invited us to speak, and we had had the pleasure of listening to several of the members of this Lodge, he inquired whether anyone had more to offer for the Good of the Order; when a stranger rose from an obscure seat in the rear of the room and desired permission to express his gratitude for the privilege that meeting had afforded in allowing him to see and hear the brethren from California. "I was," he went on to say, "in the city of Memphis in September, 1878, when the yellow fever was scattering the seeds of death among our people. No tongue can ever tell the terrors of those days. Our streets were filled with the corpses of the dead, which were being borne to the Silent City in every conceivable manner—hearses, carriages, wagons and carts were loaded with the decaying bodies of our people, while now and then might be seen the form of a strong man bending beneath the shrouded body, and hastening out of the city. In the midst of these harrowing scenes a few of the brethren from the various Workmen Lodges in Memphis met in one of our Lodge rooms to counsel together, and, if possible, devise means to relieve the distress among our brethren. It was a gloomy and not to be forgotten gathering. We were sad and disheartened. Weak and worn with our daily watchings, our money gone, our families destitute, we knew not where to turn, when a messenger came into the room bearing a dispatch from Brother Jordan, the Grand Master of California, directing us to draw at sight for $500. Brethren, that was the first relief that had ever come to us from beyond the borders of our own jurisdiction, and while the tears of gratitude fell from our eyes, we knelt down and one offered to God a prayer in which all our hearts joined with a will, thanking Him for the generous souls that filled the bosoms of our brethren in California."

It would seem from this statement of our good brother that this draft for $500 was the first relief that went into the Valley of the Mississippi during those eventful days from the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and, such being the case, I have thought it proper that the document itself should no longer be my personal property, but should be filed among the archives of this Grand Lodge, and now take pleasure in presenting it for that purpose, with the hope that while it shall remain with us it may ever be considered as giving voice to the deep flowing generosity and fraternal regard that swells continually in the hearts of the brethren of California.

Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. W.

Brethren of the Grand Lodge:—It is well to devote a few moments to parting words of cheer, ere we separate and go to our various occupations in life. This has been a busy and interesting session. Matters of moment, upon which opinion have honestly differed, have been brought before us; debate, earnest and sincere, has ensued, and yet, although both sides have been unable to gain any one case, I believe the legislation has been for the honor and the good of our Order, and that we all acquiesce as true Workmen in the will of the majority, and pledge ourselves to unite in carrying forward every measure passed by this Grand body. I thank you one and all for the courtesies extended, not only here, but in many of our Lodge rooms, and trust that it may be the will of Him who ruleth the universe that we may often meet again. I sincerely hope that we all go from this session with one determination, viz.: to upbuild and increase this great practical institution of the age; that no unkind or ungenerous emotion dwells in any brother's heart, but that even as these brilliant rays of the golden sun are now shining through this hall, surrounding this band of brothers with their rich light and glory, so may the sun of prosperity ever beam upon our Order, diffusing love, harmony and fraternity in our homes and hearts, in our Lodge rooms and throughout our commonwealth.

We are all constituted more or less differently and placed in different spheres of action. We speak, act and think according to our standpoint. Like the mosaics of the famed pictures, we are of different designs, shapes and shades, but if, according to the light that is vouchsafed us, we earnestly and honestly do our duty, rest assured the result will be a symmetrical, harmonious whole that will not only challenge the respect of all mankind, but be blessed by the prayers of the widow and the orphan.

Brethren, I bid you a fraternal God-speed as we part, and should it be our fate never to meet again in Grand Lodge, let us so order our lives as to catch the password that will allow us to enter in beyond the veil of the great hereafter, to dwell forever in the bliss of a happy immortality.

J. T. Rogers, P. G. M. W.

My BROTHERS:—In response to your kind call, allow me to return to you a true gratitude for your sympathy and cordial endorsement. The work of the last year has been arduous and the tenderest consolations originate in your approval. I have at all times considered that my responsibilities were measured by the millions of our benefits. And though this test is surely great enough, yet every true Workman feels that the moral responsibilities are immeasurably grander, and sweep in their influence far into the realms of light. Thus feeling I have tried to do right. The fruitage is before you, but its aroma will still float in the memory of the faithful. And whatever is good and pure we hope will "plead like angels trumpet-tongued" for a generous recognition.

I am not going to speak longer than to say, that our order has a brilliant and useful destiny. Money is the marble of our temple, but Fraternity is the cement. Money is the well-stretched and connected wire, but Fraternity is the electrical messenger to a waiting world. These are the garlanded and well-loved servants who bear our burdens. In their union is power; a manly integrity supplies that protection to our business affairs, which in monied institutions is found in high salaries.

Confidence in the integrity of each member is our safety. Keep this in your minds. We have now finished the work. Let us bask in the glories of a sympathetic communion. Let the splendors of a heavenly fraternity light up our altars, and its fires kindle a flame of love in your hearts. Take it back to your home Lodges. There it should burn till its glories shall light up every heart. Let all listen to the silvery voice of mercy and endeavor to throw the strength of the Workman's protection over his loved ones. May Heaven sanctify this hour in your memory, wherein a spirit of greater devotion is inspired. And may God gild your days with a happy radiance is my prayer; and my hope is that Workmanship may, not only in song and speech, but in that more Godlike form of expression, work, exemplify that which was promulgated amid the solemnities of Sinai, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

David McClure, G. M. W.

Brethren of the Grand Lodge:—I will not detain you long with the words of thanks and good hope that I may offer. I realize to the full the grave responsibility that rests upon me in attempting to fill the important office in which you have placed me, and shall do the best that my surroundings and occupation may permit to see that the Order suffers no retrogression during my administration, but on the contrary shall strive to assist to a sound and healthy growth. To this end I would especially ask my deputies and the other workers throughout the Order, to assist me in this great work—to uphold my hands and see that the work flags in no quarter. I thank you for your encouragement and support thus far, and trust for a continuance of it for the good of our great and beloved Order. Republics, empires and men, under the inexorable law of change and decay will sink into the dark sea of oblivion, but the principle of our ritual are eternal. Principles will never perish. As long as there are tears to wipe away, sufferings to alleviate, orphans to educate, widows to care for and the weak to protect, our noble Order will exist, moving onward and upward in its high and holy mission, with no lessening step like the rustle of an angel's wing. Its foundations are laid in God's eternal truth and love.

Duncan McPherson, G. F.

After the Past Grand Masters and the Grand Master-elect had spoken, the Grand Foreman was called for. Grand Foreman McPherson rose to his feet with some hesitancy, and it was evident that he had expected to be "let out" without a speech. However, excusing his inability to rival in speech the eloquence of the distinguished brothers who had just preceded him, he said that when he became a Workman five years ago he did so under protest, having no confidence in the honesty or economy of life insurance, whether corporate or fraternal, but that his experience had taught him the errors of his conclusions, and that he had learned to love the Order of A. O. U. W.; that it was insurance at the actual cost of insurance; that it was the cheapest insurance obtainable; that it was composed of unselfish men—of men who were insured for the benefit of their wives and little ones, and not for themselves in their separate, individual persons; that it was an American conception, an American institution born on American soil; that we did not have to grope among the cobwebs of a mystified past to find its origin or to place our hands on its originators; that its formation was in our own country, and that its founders still live; that it was among the grandest conceptions of the human mind, and the expression of a generous heart; that Californians had special reason to be proud of it, for California was the second largest jurisdiction in one of the numerically strongest fraternities in the Union, being only surpassed in membership by the Empire State with its 5,300,000 people; that the election of Dr. M. W. Fish, of California, to the exalted position of Supreme Master of the Supreme Lodge was something to be proud of. Brother McPherson closed his characteristic speech of short sentences and indisputable truisms with the prophetic declaration that as the Workmen were only excelled in numbers in this State by the Odd Fellows, the time was not far distant when the A. O. U. W. would lead all other Orders of the Pacific coast in numerical strength and intellectual completeness.

Edwin Danforth, G. O.

I do not propose at this time to make any extended remarks, from the fact that after a three days session you are not in a frame of mind to be detained here much longer.

In electing me to the office of Grand Overseer you have conferred a great honor upon me and I shall try to be worthy of it, that at the next session of this Lodge you may say your confidence was not misplaced; I believe it to be the duty of the Grand Lodge officers to take a personal interest in the affairs of the Subordinate Lodges. To do this will require sacrifice of time as well as business, but believing as I do that it is for the good of the order, I shall endeavor to fulfill the promise I made when elected—that I would visit half of the Lodges in this jurisdiction before the next session of the Grand Lodge. I am in favor of so districting the State that the Grand officers may know what they are expected to do in the districts. In conclusion allow me to say to you, Representatives from the interior, return to your Lodges and kindle anew the fires upon your altars and resolve that you will make this a personal matter—to increase our membership.

Personal effort will accomplish much and with the encouragement of the Grand Lodge officers you can make this administration as successful as any that have preceded.

Business Notes.

BRO. ROBT. MATTHEY is proprietor of the Palace bakery, 1523 Mission, and the bread, pies, cakes and goods made by him cannot be excelled in the city. Try them and see.

BROTHER L. VINCENT, M. W. of Burns, has established himself at 417 Kearny street, as house broker and commission merchant. He is well and favorably known as a sagacious and reliable broker, and any business entrusted to him will be handled in the interest of his patrons.

GOLDEN GATE, No. 8.—On Thursday evening 24th inst., this "Mother Lodge" held a meeting that reminded us of old times. There were a goodly number present and the principal work of the evening was conferring the M. W. Degree on four candidates. It was done in a manner alike, correct and pleasing.

BROTHER I. E. ALEXANDER, carpenter, builder and contractor, has removed to a central location, No. 616 California street, where he is ready to serve his friends. His skillful handiwork takes a wide range in repairing, refitting, jobbing in stores or houses, or building houses. His large experience and good judgment will be brought into requisition for his customers, and any would do well to avail themselves of his services.

ANGLO CALIFORNIAN BANK.—As a matter of information to our workmen, we refer to the above well known bank, as the custodian of our funds. With a large capital stock, and able managers, among whom we may mention Ex-Gov. Low and the well known financier, Ignatz Steinhart. This bank is regarded as one of the safest and most reliable banks in this State. With most of the employees brother Workmen, it is gratifying to know that this solid and conservative institution holds our funds in trust.

BROTHER J. MEREDITH DAVIES, General Agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, has been a resident of our city for three years. He is known as a prominent and honored member of the leading fraternal societies, and by his general manner, politeness, integrity and honest dealing with the traveling public, has become a great favorite. Parties desiring information or a trip East will be correctly equipped by applying to J. Meredith Davies, No. 2 New Montgomery, Palace Hotel.

KING OF AGUE.—We have before us evidence that is positive and reliable that C. L. Robinson & Co., of Oakland, have a remedy, preventive and sure cure for chills and fever, malaria and liver complaint. It is a remedy discovered by Prof. C. L. Robinson (formerly of Norway), and in its composition no quinine or mercury is used, but is composed of roots and herbs entirely. Bro. Frank Nichalysen has become interested in this popular medicine, and is furnishing the capital to manufacture and introduce it.

BRO. SOL. SHIPPER, of Multnomah, 48, Portland, Oregon, has associated in business with Mr. J. Swartz as merchant tailor, and opened an immense establishment in their line at 733 Market, opposite Dupont, with a full line of the best foreign and domestic goods. Bro. Shipper is well known as a practical and skillful cutter, having had an experience of 18 years, of which eight was in San Jose, and five years in Portland, Oregon.

BRO. GEO. JORDAN, successor to the well-known house of Dewey & Jordan, 433 Montgomery street, has long maintained a high reputation as a dealer in watches, jewelry and silverware. A characteristic feature of this house has been to keep first-class goods, and sell them on their merits, at a fair valuation. Fine jewelry made to order, and complicated watches repaired. A practical experience of twenty-seven years, and square dealing has given this house a leading position in their line.

PACIFIC GROVE RETREAT.—One of the most successful enterprises and grand achievements for the over-worked people of California is the establishment of the elyrium at Pacific Grove Retreat, at Monterey. The Pacific Improvement Co., under the guidance of master hands, has made this retreat of nature the great attraction of the Pacific coast. The safety, comfort and elegance of the S. P. R. R. cars, and the protection to the families in this health resort, has established one fact for California, viz: That the pine groves of Monterey, nestled by the side of the sea, will be the chief summer and winter resort for invalids, tourists and families for the Pacific coast.

PACIFIC GROVE RETREAT RESTAURANT.—The new restaurant at the Seaside resort is now equipped and ready for their guests. The proprietor, Mr. Schonewald, is a well known restaurateur and caterer, and visitors can have the best of food at a very moderate cost. It seems to be the policy and conception of the managers at this haven of rest, to provide accommodations at a lower cost, so that families can avoid the vexations and care of house keeping. In selecting Mr. Schonewald to have charge of this department seems quite fortunate, as it will be kept a first-class restaurant, or furnish board by the week at a small cost.

BRO. GEO. A. DEAN, of the Pacific Straw Works, No. 16 Fourth street, is prepared to furnish the latest style hat and bonnet frames. Feathers cleaned, curled, dyed; and straw and felt cleaned like new. Parties wanting the latest styles would do well to call on the enterprising proprietor of the Pacific Straw Works.

W. C. PRICE & CO. have opened a wholesale shipping and commission house at 320 Washington St. In their business they take in the whole range of California and Oregon produce, and are doing a large business. They are a responsible house, and Bro. W. C. Price is one of those active, pushing young men who are bound to succeed.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. #### Successful Patent Solicitors.

As Dewey & Co. have been in the patent soliciting business on this coast now for so many years, the firm's name is a well-known one. Another reason for its popularity is that a great proportion of the Pacific coast patents issued by the Government have been procured through their agency. They are, therefore, well and thoroughly posted on the needs of the progressive industrial classes of this coast. They are the best posted firm on what has been done in all branches of industry, and are able to judge of what is now and patentable. In this they have a great advantage, which is of practical dollar and cent value to their clients. That is this understood and appreciated is evidenced by the number of patents issued through their scientific press patent agency (S. F.) from week to week and year to year.

ATMOSPHERIC WAVES PRODUCED BY VOLCANIC ACTION.—Professor Soester, director of the observatory of Berlin, and others, have remarked the existence of sudden barometric changes in calm, steady weather occurring during the month of August last, and have traced their connection with the eruption of Krakatoa on August 27th. The chief shock of this eruption was felt about 7 A. M. on that day, and the resulting atmospheric wave appears to have traveled over the world. The first wave was felt at Berlin about 10 hours later, giving a velocity of propagation of 1,000 kilometers per hour, or nearly the speed of sound. About sixteen hours later a second disturbance was felt, probably due to the wave which did not come direct, but around the other side of the world, by America. For the same speed of propagation the time would correspond to the distance in this case. Moreover, thirty-six hours after the first disturbance at Berlin, a third was felt of a weaker sort, and this corresponds again in point of speed. Lastly, a fourth and weaker disturbance was observed thirty-four hours after the second wave, the acceleration in this case being due, perhaps to atmospheric currents from east to west.

THE COLOR OF SUNLIGHT.—Since the time of Newton it has been assumed that all the radiations of the sun were to be found in the spectrum, and that these reunited make white light. There is also a tacit assumption that white light is pure sunlight. Some of the early experiments at Alleghany have been mentioned which showed that the light as we receive it has been somewhat altered by the sun's atmosphere. The change is an absorption of rays from the blue end of the spectrum. It follows that our sunlight is more red and less blue, and far less intense than it would be if the solar atmosphere did not intervene. But we are concerned with something nearer home. Our own atmosphere repeats the performance, strangles many rays at the blue end of the spectrum, and comparatively few at the red end. What does this mean? Let us shake hands with our friend who wears green goggles. We, too, have all our lives seen things in a false light. If we could place ourselves outside of our atmosphere—say on the moon—we should find that sunlight is not white; that the sun itself is really blue. To the inhabitants of "other worlds than ours" the sun may be a bluer star than Vega.—Harper's Magazine.

Grand Foreman Duncan McPherson.

On this page we give a portrait of Duncan McPherson, Grand Foreman of the A. O. U. W. for the ensuing year. Brother McPherson is a native of the State of New York, of Scotch descent, forty-five years of age, and at the present time senior proprietor and editor of the Santa Cruz Daily and Weekly Sentinel.

He arrived in California in 1852, and while yet a mere boy, engaged in mining in the counties of Placer and El Dorado, not ceasing his search for virgin gold till he had spent one year with pan, cradle and sluice in the Frazer River Diggings of British Columbia. Finding that valuable metal as hard to catch in gulch and hillside as in the other busy walks of life, he concluded to fit himself for the latter by attending the public schools of Santa Cruz, and afterward the University of the Pacific in Santa Clara. In 1860 he engaged in farming and "bull-whacking," opening a wood-yard in the city of Santa Cruz. The engagement in this varied employment was more for the physical upbuilding than for financial profit, for he left college under the pressure of poor health. At the end of four years he found himself much improved physically and strengthened financially.

In 1864 the proprietor and editor of the Sentinel, learning that young Duncan had some ambition to become a journalist, offered to exchange one-half of the journal named for the latter's farm. A bargain was struck, the team disposed of and the wood-yard closed out, and we at once find the subject of our sketch at the "case," where he did compositor's work for three years, thoroughly mastering the duties of a practical printer from "roller boy" up. In 1871 he became the editor of the San Mateo Gazette, where he labored till 1876, owning an interest in the Sentinel during most of the time between the dates given. In the last mentioned year he sold the Gazette and returned to Santa Cruz, purchasing a two-thirds interest in the Sentinel, which is now increased to a five-sixths interest. Continuously during the last eight years has he been the editor of the Sentinel, a journal that is now nearly twenty-nine years of age, prosperous, influential, and enjoying a patronage and circulation excelled by few of the weekly publications of this western land washed by the broadest sea.

Brother McPherson has succeeded in business as few newspaper men have, who, among the country members, are noted for their eternal struggle to keep the wolf from the door. He is recognized at home as among the practical "solid" men, deriving more than a competence from property located in the business heart of the city in which he resides.

In his candidacy for the Overseership of the Grand Lodge Brother McPherson had a number of formidable rivals, but on the second ballot he was elected by the splendid majority of one hundred and thirty-nine to fifty for the foremost of his competitors. At the session of the Grand Lodge of the present year, the largest session in point of membership ever held in this jurisdiction, and one of the most harmonious and promising, Brother McPherson was importuned to allow his name to be used in connection with the position of Grand Master Workman, but this he declined to do unless David McClure, Grand Foreman, and E. F. Loud, three times appointed Deputy Grand Master, his personal friends, were both out of the field. In his candidacy for the high office of Grand Foreman, he was so unanimously the choice of the Grand Lodge that he stood unopposed and was elected without competition, which fact he dwelt on in his speech of acceptance, thanking the Grand Lodge, first for electing him, and secondly for electing him not as a partisan, but as their unanimous choice.

Of our Grand Foreman it may be said that he is in the full vigor of strong manhood; earnest, energetic, and alive to passing events; with a reputation untarnished; a man of actions rather than words; magnetic in speech, and with a laudable ambition to continue to rise in life, and stand well in the esteem of honorable men. In addition to his favorite Order, the A. O. U. W., he is a prominent member and officer of the Knights of Honor, Knights of Pythias and several kindred Orders.

DEPUTY GRAND MASTER LOUI has recently visited Lodges in Redwood City, Napa and St. Helena. We should be glad to have some brother send us particulars.

For Somebody's Sake.

As o'er life's mountains and vales
Our pilgrimage journey we take,
We add to our trouble and care,
And heavier burdens we bear,
For somebody's sake.

Though deeply we're wounded by grief,
Though the heart may continue to ache,
Our sorrows we keep out of sight
And our faces are smiling and bright,
For somebody's sake.

We labor and toil all the day,
And many a sacrifice make,
And at night may be weary and worn
And the trials we've cheerfully borne,
For somebody's sake.

Though humble our dwelling may be,
Though simple the food we partake,
Our happiness may be assured

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

THE types made me say in the last issue of the WATCHMAN that officers are henceforth to be elected on the first meetings of May and November, etc. The types were in error, and should have said last when they said first. The context indicated the error, but yet many were led astray, much to my regret and increase of correspondence. But then no one is free from blunders, and no harm has been done that cannot be easily remedied. The change in the law is designed to give officers one month after election in order to post themselves in the work of the Order previous to installation. Where Lodges meet but semi-monthly, election of officers only occurs on the last meeting night in November. This rule is inviolable.

of the Grand Lodge will be ready for delivery the first of next week. Two copies will be sent to each Lodge to be placed on file, and one to each officer and Representative.

ALL amendments to by-laws should be sent to Brother Henry Vroqman, Oakland, who is Chairman of Committee on Laws and Supervision. The Legislature no doubt will soon adjourn, when his duties in connection with the Order will be discharged with his usual promptitude.

Designation of Beneficiary Revocable.

Deceased belonged to the "A. O. U. W. By the laws of the Order, members had the right "to hold, dispose of, and fully control said benefit at all times." His certificate was made payable to his wife. She died before he did. The benefit was paid into Court by the Order, and contested for by the administrator of the husband and administrator of the wife. The Court held that, while in case of ordinary insurance, a policy made payable to the wife would have been irrevocable, and would have entitled her administrator to the money, even if she had died before her husband, yet that in this kind of insurance, inasmuch as the member had the right at all times "to hold, dispose of, and control the benefit," his mere designation making it payable to her would be revocable. Therefore, her interest in the fund was a mere expectancy, not property or estate, it terminated at her death, occurring prior to his, and all her interest was thus extinguished, consequently the money was directed to be paid to the administrator of the husband. Reverend and Right Worshipful, M. W. M. 11, 122, 13 N. H. K., 599.

THE meeting of the Supreme Lodge outside of the United States, will be a novelty in its history. Toronto is a favorite point for meetings of Supreme Lodges, says the Call. The Odd Fellows held a session there a few years ago. The Canadians are noted for their hospitality and will give the representative men of the Order a warm reception. The session commences June 3d. California is entitled to three Representatives besides Dr. Fish the present Supreme Master Workman.

The Fireside.

The Land of the Afternoon.

An old man sits in his garden chair,
Watching the sunlit western sky;
What sees he in the blue depth there,
Where only the Isles of Memory lie?
There are princely towers and castles high,
There are gardens fairer than human ken,
There are happy children thronging by,
Radiant women and stately men,
Singing with voices of sweet attune
The songs of the Land of the Afternoon.

The old man watches a form of cloud
That floats where the azure islands are,
And he sees a homestead gray and loved
And a hand that beckons him afar.
O, cheek of roses and hair of gold!
O, eyes of heaven's divinest blue!
Long have ye lain in the graveyard mold—
But love is infinite, love is true:
He will find her—yes—it must be soon,
They will meet in the Land of the Afternoon.

The sky has changed, and a wreck of cloud
Is diving athwart its troubled face,
The golden mist is a trailing shroud;
It is cold and bleak in the garden place.
The old man smiles and droops his head,
The thin hair blows from his wrinkled brow,
The sunset radiance has appeared
O'er every wasted feature now;
One sigh exhales like a breath in June—
He has found the Land of the Afternoon.

When to Make the Beds.

(Written by I. H.)

"I could not have believed," said Mrs. C., with a scornful toss of her head, "that little Mrs. L. is such a slack house keeper. Why, only last week I went into her house at half past nine in the morning, and there was not one of her beds made."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed her auditor.

"Yes indeed, and she was actually sitting down with her sewing in her hands, as if all her morning's work was finished."

"Dear me! I am sure I could never do that; it would give me a fit to be obliged to leave things that way. But maybe she was extra busy on something she had to finish in a hurry."

"Not at all; she put her work away and walked round the garden showing me her flowers, and though she must have known I could see into her bedrooms, she never explained or apologized. It seems to be her way."

"She always looks neat, too," said the other, "but that's the trouble with some women; they spend all their time fixing themselves up and don't care how their houses look."

"Well, her house looked nice enough, I must say, all but the beds; that was what puzzled me. I know if she should come in here at that time of day and catch me with my bed unmade, I wouldn't get over it for a week." Thus Mrs. C. and her next neighbor.

Now, what would these two women have said or thought if they had overheard some remarks made by the little Mrs. L., whom they had been discussing?

"Really, John," she said to her husband, who, like herself, was something of an enthusiast on sanitary subjects, "I don't wonder that there is so much sickness, fever, diphtheria and death, even in country districts, when people are so mortally afraid of fresh air."

"Nor I. But what new discovery have you been making now?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I had occasion to go into Mrs. C.'s house one morning last week. It was quite early—not more than half past seven, I should think. You know the arrangement of her rooms; as she took me along the passage to the kitchen, where my errand lay, I could not help seeing into her own bedroom and her daughter's. There were the beds, at that hour of the day before the sun could possibly have shone into the rooms, ostentatiously done up in white spreads and lace-trimmed pillow cases; and all the bed-clothes tucked in hard and fast around the sides, as if they never meant to be disturbed again. It gave me a creeping sensation all over. I am sure I could not sleep in that woman's house without having an attack of typhoid fever."

"And what did you say?" asked her husband.

"Say? You don't suppose I was foolish enough to say anything. Why, I have no doubt she thought I had a lesson, and was proud of giving it to me; for she has been here at a much later hour, and has seen my sheets and blankets scattered all over the room on chairs and tables, wherever the sun and air could reach them."

Mr. L. laughed. "I dare say she considers you a very poor housekeeper."

"She is quite welcome to her opinion, then," said his wife, with the serene air of one whose conscience was at ease on that subject.

Which of these women was right, and which was wrong? Medical men tell us that the human body is constantly giving off particles of waste matter through the pores of the skin. These are of necessity retained in a measure in the clothing; and when we are in bed, in the blankets and sheets which cover us.

Cleanliness and health require that these impurities shall be dissipated as quickly and as thoroughly as possible, and the well-known agents for the work are soap and water, sunshine and fresh air.

No woman, under a mistaken idea of being forehanded with her work, should make a bed before breakfast, nor indeed for an hour or two afterwards. Throw the bedclothes off entirely; let the air from an open window (the sun too, if possible) reach every separate article, and the mattress and pillows as well. Rainy weather will of course interfere with this full ventilation; all the more should we take advantage of the sunshine, which is no rarity in our favored climate.

"What have you been putting in our bed to make it smell so sweet?" asked one of my children when the late storms were over for a season.

"Only fresh air and sunshine," was the answer; for the bed had stood uncovered all the day, while sheets and blankets hung on the clothes line, as they ought to do at least once a week in fine weather.

Fewer headaches, sore throats, weak appetites, and even more serious complaints might visit our homes were we all as careful as we should be in these matters.

Walnut Creek.

Danger in Tight Trousers.

Our sisters and our cousins and our aunts have been so long and so severely lectured on the subject of corsets that it is poetic justice to acknowledge that the other sex is guilty of dangerous pressure on the anatomy. The following is from the Philadelphia Record:

"Here, conductor, this young man's fainted."

These words were uttered in a tone of great excitement by a stout woman of about forty years of age last evening in a Columbia Avenue car, and as she spoke a slim youth who was seated beside her in a corner of the car fell forward and dropped in a heap upon the straw.

With the assistance of a gentleman the conductor lifted the senseless youth on to the seat, and two minutes later, as the car passed a drug store, pulled the bell-strap, and, followed by a half a dozen interested passengers, five of whom were women, carried him into the store, where he was placed on a lounge in a back room.

A doctor was hurriedly summoned, and after a disappearance of about ten minutes the young man and physician came out of the room, which had been kept closed, arm in arm. The young man's face was still pale, and he walked with a very perceptible tremor.

After a few moments rest, the young man got on another car and went away, and the doctor said: "That is the fourth case this month I have seen of the deadly effects of wearing tight trousers; and had that young man not been attended to promptly, he might have been in great danger."

"Tight trousers?" queried a by-stander incredulously.

"Yes, sir; tight trousers! Why, you cannot imagine how often we doctors have to treat cases of illness brought on by no other cause. Take that young man, for instance; his trousers were at least four sizes too small for him; not too short, of course, but too tight; and for hours he had been walking about with a pressure of at least 275 pounds to the square inch on the arteries in the calves of the leg. This tremendous pressure forces the blood into channels not able to carry it without undue straining; and although the victim feels no pain, he is liable at any moment to topple over in a swoon, and unless relief is promptly given, a long and serious illness is likely to follow. It is a similar trouble to that experienced when it was the fashion for ladies to wear very tight sleeves, except that in the case of tight trousers the material is heavier, the arteries larger, and the result apt to be more dangerous and difficult to relieve."

Colfax's "Sunshine."

It is "SUNSHINE," not the fervid midsummer sunshine of the god of day, but the beneficent sunshine of heart and soul, which warms without sunstroke, and thrills without reaction. We live, indeed—and alas, it has been so since Eden owned its first inhabitants—in a world of bigotry and strife, of selfishness and calumny, of sickness and death! Misery confronts us on every side. Poverty constantly appeals to us from the wayside. And how often do sorrow and suffering knock so sadly at the doors of our homes! How it dispels gloom, how it lights up the darkness, how it lifts the lowering cloud, how it warms the chilled heart, how it inspires the despairing, when some one with loving hand and cheery word and beaming smile sheds the brightness of his nature all around! Like the joyous spring which banishes winter's rigor, or the healthful autumn frost which extirpates both malaria and pestilence—to such every heart instinctively exclaims, "All hail, and welcome!" Nothing will yield you richer rewards of gladness, and a greater wealth of joy, than faithfully to cultivate, and auspiciously to develop the happier, warmer, sunnier side of your nature, that you may be a blessing to yourself, and more than this a blessing to all around you. Who has not seen illustrated the truthfulness of a recent writer in one of our most popular journals, that, "for a daily companion, the sunny temper is far superior to the greatest genius, the most sparkling wit, or even the most profound ability." Dr. Johnson once remarked, with his usual point and pith, that the custom of looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds income per year. But Hume rated the dollar and cents value of cheerfulness far higher; for he said he would rather possess a cheerful disposition, always inclined to look at the bright side of things, than to be the master of an estate of ten thousand per year. But, when the effects of good nature, happy dispositions and sunny temperaments are measured in their wider relation to the family, or the still wider circle of friends, or the far wider circle of the community, they become still more incapable of financial computation. If all cankerous ill-nature, if all acrimonious words, if all unkind retorts, if all ebullitions of temper, if all moroseness of disposition, could be banished from our daily lives, what a perpetual harvest of joy should we all garner up. But, to succeed thoroughly in this endeavor, you must supplement this sunshine by purging yourself of that selfishness which doth indeed so easily beset us, and which chills, sooner or later, the warmest heart. How many do you find around you, cold, cynical, austere, repulsive. No noble charity honors their lives! No unselfish act beautifies their natures! No generous deed unlocks their hearts! No blessings are invoked upon their heads! Living ignobly for self alone, they carry with them to their graves hearts of steel and faces of iron. But, thank God! there are others, active in every good word and work. Is there a cry of distress? How cheerily do they respond! Does some poor, weak wayfarer stumble in the pathway of life? How promptly do they extend a helping hand! Is there misery to be assuaged? Is there a bruised and bleeding heart that needs the oil of consolation? How quickly they speed on their errand of humanity! With what magnetic inspiration do they go forth in their labor of love! How they lift the lowering cloud by the electric power of their beaming smile and tender sympathy! The truest felicity of this world is in making others happy. It is this which causes a constant influx of gladness into your own life. For, in blessing others, God has so ordered it, that for more do you bless yourself; and the good cheer you give to others is multiplied in your own heart. And, as a summing up of the whole matter, I close here with Blackie's famous quatrain:

From Hon. Schuyler Colfax's "Landmarks of Life; to be found on a New Year's Day Journey."

Three blissful words I name to thee,
Three words of potent charm,
From eating care thy heart to free,
Thy life to shield from harm,—Pray, Work, and Sing.

STENOGRAPHY.—An exchange tells of a lady, a leader in fashionable society, whose health broke down under the demands of the gay life she led and who became a wretched victim of nervousness and sleeplessness. Like many another woman in such a condition, she was ready to do anything to escape from the horrors of those two combined, and she plunged herself into a thousand-fold worse danger by resorting to morphine. Then her physician told her that her only hope was to have some occupation that would divert her mind. She took up shorthand writing, plunged into it with enthusiasm, and soon found her health thoroughly restored. Stenography had won the day against morphine. The little story has a very large moral, much larger than we have the cruelty to inflict upon our readers. But many of the evils which afflict the American woman have their origin in her nervous system, and she would find some such course as this vastly more beneficial than any or all of the nostrums she could take. Healthful, continuous, interesting occupation, if she has none, and change to something new if she is already a worker, she will find the best and simplest remedy for sleepless nights and too many nerves.

WINNING APPLAUSE.—Fannie Horton, a once celebrated actress, won her first applause in a somewhat singular manner. During her performance in a particular scene she was loudly hissed, when, advancing to the footlights, she asked: "Which do you dislike—my playing or my person?" "The playing, the playing!" was the answer from all parts of the house. "Well, that consoles me; for my playing may be bettered, but my person I cannot alter!" The audience were so struck with the ingenuity of this retort that they immediately applauded as loudly as they had the moment before condemned her; and from that night she improved in her acting, and soon became a favorite with the public.—Chamber's Journal.

WILLIAMSBURG, Penn., was thrown into a terrible state of excitement the other day by a report that a lady had climbed to the top of a tall tree. Everybody thought she was going to commit suicide, and it was not five minutes until there were 500 people around that tree yelling at her. She climbed out on a limb that bent and creaked under her weight, which caused the crowd to suspend breathing and patiently wait for the dull thud that must follow. Instead of taking a tumble she carefully loosened a string of delicate lace from a twig, where it had been blown from her window by a cruel April zephyr, placed it in her bosom and deliberately descended to terra firma.

Yet, never freed from whip and sting,

Problem.

A gentleman sent his son to market, promising him one-fourth of the proceeds from the merchandise he might sell. He also directed the boy to bring him home $1.00 and to invest the balance in cloth at ten cents per yard. The son sold 36½ pounds of fish at 7 cents per pound, 3½ bushels of potatoes at 63 cents, and 8 bushels of apples at $1.17½.

How many yards of cloth did the boy buy, and what amount did he retain for himself?

The Little Prince's Labor of Love.

The late Comte de Chambord was always noted for amiability and kindness of heart, and was never embittered by the changed prospects of his life. At six years of age he was the little Duc de Bordeaux, the grandson of Charles X, and the hopes and expectations of France were fixed upon him. Like many other robust and easy-tempered children, he considered lessons a terrible hardship, and particularly disliked writing. His copy-books were blotted and scrawled over dreadfully, to his father's great displeasure and the despair of the unfortunate tutor whose task it was to teach him to write. But the child was merry, asked pardon in such engaging tones, and made such good resolutions for future copies, that the writing master could not look grave for long, and perhaps his royal pupil took advantage of him.

One morning, however, the child's playfulness failed to rouse him from a settled melancholy; there were even tears in the old man's eyes; and, although the little Duc de Bordeaux asked over and over again what ailed him, he could obtain no answer. After lessons, however, a servant told the boy that his tutor was responsible for a debt of one thousand francs incurred by his son, and saw no means of obtaining the money. When the royal family were assembled at the noonday breakfast, the little duke said, in his most coaxing tone,

"Grandfather, if I write well for a whole week, will you give me something?"

"Yes."

"Will you give me fifty louis?"

"That is a great deal of money," said the king. "What will you do with it?"

"That is my secret," replied the child; whereupon Charles X. smiled and promised.

The next morning the boy sat with his copy book at a window overlooking the Tuileries. The birds sang, the tame pigeons came and perched on the window-sill, merry children played under the trees, but for once he neither heard nor saw any of them, and actually accomplished a whole copy without mistake or blot. The tutor was astonished, and his amazement increased when his pupil's careful industry continued for a week. No sooner was the last page finished than he took his copy book to his grandfather, and in a few minutes returned, carrying in both hands the bag containing the fifty louis. His bright face was suffused with blushes as he gave it into the tutor's hands, saying, "Here are my wages. Please accept them. I only worked that I might give them to you."—Selected.

"Oh, dear, I believe I should faint if a man asked me to marry him!" said a giddy, gushing damsel. "Never fear," retorted her grandmother. "You might possibly faint, but if you wanted him you'd manage to say yes before you did so."

A New Cure for Cancer.

Information of one more remedy alleged to possess special virtues in curing "cancer" reaches us through a correspondent from Brazil. Dr. Ignacio Aleibiades Velloso, of Recife, Pernambuco, introduced the remedy to notice, and in a communication to the Journal de Recife gives his experience of its use.

He states that the plant, which is popularly known by the name of the "alvelos," belongs to the Euphorbiaceæ, and is indigenous to Pernambuco. He alleges that a magistrate who was suffering from epithelioma of the face, and who had returned to his estate despairing of relief, was entirely cured of his disease by the topical application of the juice of this plant. Dr. Velloso, learning this, was induced to employ the same remedy on two patients at the Hospital Pedro II—one a case of canceroid of the nose, the other of epithelioma of the lip—with the result that the first patient was "completely cured" in forty days, and the second in less than two months, "much to the surprise of the other professional men of the establishment." Such results, he thinks, justify a trial of the remedy, especially in uterine cancer.

The action of the juice of the plant, as others of the same natural order, is irritating, producing a spreading dermatitis without much pain; and the application of the cut stem or the juice of the fresh plant to the diseased part is said to result in destruction of the morbid tissue, which is replaced by healthy granulations doing the work, in fact, of the chloride of zinc paste.

Upon this we need only remark that if the remedy really possesses the escharotic action described, there is less reason for doubting its efficacy in such localized morbid formations as those mentioned than there was for questioning the alleged virtues of other remedies, such as "condurango," which flourished for a time, but which were supposed to operate after they had been taken into the stomach. It is clear, however, that the use of the "alveros" must be limited to the regions in which the plant grows. —Lancet.

Pine Extract for Bathing.

It has long been recognized that the atmosphere of pine forests has an invigorating and beneficial effect upon people with weak constitutions and suffering from pulmonary disorders. At some of the watering places of Germany the very simple prescription of the physician is that the patient should spend several hours a day walking or riding through the pine wood. This simple treatment is sometimes supplemented by the taking of pine baths, and in the cases of kidney diseases and for delicate children this is claimed to be highly beneficial. The bath is prepared by simply pouring into the water about half a tumblerful of an extract made from the fresh needles of the pine. This extract is in color and closely resembles molasses in consistency, and when poured into the bath gives the water a muddy appearance, with a slight foam on the surface. The repugnance one feels to enter into such a muddy-looking fluid is dispelled as soon as the delightful aroma which arises from the bath is inhaled.

Although there may be some doubt whether pine baths act upon the system in any other wise than as a tonic, still, as an adjunct to the daily bath, infusion of the pine extract induces a most agreeable sensation. It gives the skin a deliciously soft and silky feeling, and the effect upon the nerves is quieting. It is a matter of some surprise to us that the business of manufacturing and bottling the extract for private use and public bathing establishments has not been tried in this country, where pine forests abound so extensively. The extract, when properly bottled and securely corked, will not deteriorate for a long time, and the cost for gathering the pine needles and extracting their tarry substance would not be very great, while the demand for it would likely increase to large proportions when the public became accustomed to its use. This extract is used at the baths at Sharon, N. Y., and many other places in the United States.

Magnetism as a Healing Agent.

Numerous experiments have been made for the purpose of determining the influence of magnets upon the human body. The first experiments made were conducted in Paris nearly a century ago. A man by the name of Mesmer, professed to have obtained remarkable results from the use of large magnets. The French Academy appointed a committee to investigate the matter, one member of which was the eminent Benjamin Franklin. The committee found that some effects were apparently produced by the magnets; but when the magnets were replaced by blocks of wood resembling them, the effect continued the same as before, leading them to the conclusion that the results apparently obtained from the magnets were really the work of the imagination of the patients. Numerous experiments have since been made in the same line, and some persons have claimed results from the use of magnetism; but it is by no means established that the magnet is of any remedial value whatever. Professor Charcot, of Paris, has been quoted as recommending the use of magnets, and we saw a small magnet in use in his Clinic at the Salt Petriere in Paris; but on making inquiries respecting the matter, we learned that he had no faith whatever in the remedial efficacy of the magnet, except as it influenced the imagination of the patient. He employed it in certain cases of hysteria in which the disease was largely due to a perverted mental state. We consider of no value whatever the various forms of magnetic shields, etc., which are recommended and sold as panaceas for nearly all the diseases to which flesh is heir. If magnetism is of any use whatever as a remedial agent, it must be employed in very large quantities, and by the aid of very powerful magnets. The tiny magnets used in magnetic shields would exert less influence upon the circulation than the ordinary-sized pocket magnet carried in the vest pocket. A magnetic insole will, of course, aid in keeping the feet warm, as will insoles of any other description. —Herald of Health.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.—In the opinion of the Medical Press, most physicians are very decidedly in favor of the total abolition of corporal punishment in schools. The editor asserts that the London University College school, which is attended by 500 boys, has been carried on from the first without corporal punishment, and is equal to any school in England with respect to discipline.

VELOCITIES.—An interesting table of velocities has been drawn up by Mr. James Jackson, the librarian of the Paris Geographical Society. He begins, says the Photo News, with the velocity of a man walking two miles and a half an hour, and after alluding to the respective velocities of an ordinary wind, of a race horse, of an express train, of a carrier pigeon, of a hurricane, of sound in air and water, he brings us at last to the velocity of heavenly bodies, of electricity, and finally of light. But Mr. Jackson has left out one important velocity, which has only been recently computed, and which is of singular interest, since it represents the only earthly agent known to man with a velocity quicker than sound in water, although naturally less quick than electricity and light; we mean the detonation of the photographer's old friend, gun cotton. Abel and Noble have computed that a train of gun cotton, fired with a fulminate fuse, will transmit the detonating action at a speed of from 17,000 to 19,000 feet per second. In other words detonation travels at the rate of 200 miles a minute, while next in order comes electricity, traveling through a submarine wire at a speed of some 12,000,000 feet per second.

Household Hints.

Orange Marmalade.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—Having seen an article in your paper three weeks ago, on utilizing oranges in the orange growing districts, of the possibility of manufacturing orange marmalade, I will give two well known and long tried receipts for the same, which I used for many years in England, and have also tried with success on California fruit: First method—Take three dozen oranges, boil them until you can push a straw through them, then take them out and cut them open; take out the seeds and cut the remainder of the fruit up fine; add to the pulp a quart of the water the oranges were boiled in, and add one pound of sugar to every pound of pulp and rind, then boil gently for one hour. The three dozen oranges with 11½ pounds of sugar make 21 one pound jars of marmalade.

Second method—To three pounds oranges allow three pounds sugar; wash and brush the fruit; put on the stove in boiling water just sufficient to cover them, and let boil a quarter of an hour; pour the water into a vessel and add two gills of brandy, ten eggs (whites and yolks beaten separately), four pounds of raisins stoned and chopped, four pounds of currants washed and dried, one pound of citron cut in thin slips, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a little warm water. Cream the butter, and add the sugar and yolks of eggs; add half the flour, then the whites, and the remainder of the flour with the spice and molasses. Stir in the fruit, which should have been lightly dredged with flour, and bake in deep pans, very slowly, for four hours. At least three layers of thick paper should be in the pans, and the top of the loaves must be kept covered to prevent burning. This long, slow baking is the chief point on which depends the black effect desired.

A Curious Aquatic Bird.

Our engraving gives a view of a curious aquatic bird, which launches its nest upon the water, and, it is said, practices the navigator's art, propelling its nest when danger threatens. It is such a performance which the artist has portrayed, the bird pushing off its nest preparing to alight upon it, very much as a man would shove off a boat and jump into it.

Whether the artist has drawn upon his observation or imagination in putting the bird into just the position it occupies, we are not sure; but it is a fact that there are birds with floating nests, and we shall draw from good authorities in giving a brief account of them.

Dr. Coes, in his "Birds of the Northwest," describes the American eared grebe (Podiceps Californicus). He says:

I first saw the species alive in Southern California, where I found it to be very common, both on the waters of the bay of San Pedro and in the sloughs back of the coast. They were, of course, in immature dress, the season being November. During the past year I was pleased to find the birds breeding, in pools about Turtle mountain, with various other water fowl. This is apparently the northeasternmost point at which the species has been observed. Visiting this locality in July, I was too late for eggs, for the young were already swimming, and in most cases fledged. The birds were very common, rather more so than the horned grebe, with which they were associated. Many specimens were secured in their full nuptial dress. The change begins in August, but it is not completed until well into the following month, as traces of the breeding plumage persist several weeks after it has grown faded and obscure. On the breeding grounds, as just said, the eared grebes were more plentiful than the horned, since a majority of the latter breed farther north; but upon the migration, when these come south, the proportion is reversed. Both species were to be seen together upon all the water courses of Northern Dakota when I left the country in the middle of October. I saw nothing notably different in their general habits.

An Oil Spot in the Gulf of Mexico.

Lieutenant Stamm, of the revenue cutter Andrew Johnson, recently gave the following description of a remarkable "oil spot" in the Gulf of Mexico, about which there has been much discussion among scientists recently. The facts in connection with this locality are wonderfully corroborative of the claim set up for stilling the sea waves, by the artificial application of oil to the surface of the sea. Lieutenant Stamm describes the "spot" as follows:

"The oil spot is situated about ten miles south of Sabine Pass, into which flows the Sabine river to the Gulf of Mexico, and it extends two miles along shore, and seaward about three quarters of a mile. There is nothing remarkable about its appearance during calm weather, but in a gale, when riled, it assumes a reddish hue and is thick and muddy. The greatest depth, where comparative quietude reigns while the elements are at war is 12 feet, so none but vessels of moderate draft can enter.

Have, with very little effort, from one of the ship's boats pushed a pole thirty feet in length down into the soft stratum. A storm from the northeast, by way of east to southeast, has a rake of from 300 to 700 miles across the Gulf of Mexico into this mystic haven. During a gale the spot is wonderfully defined. Looking seaward the scene is grand. An acre of towering foam marks the abrupt dissolution of the lashing seas as they thunder toward the shore. This occurs in about three fathoms, or eighteen feet of water, from which the storm-driven craft, creaking and straining in every timber, emerges and suddenly finds herself reposing like a child rocked in its mother's arms, hemmed in by a wall of wrath, where the weary mariner can be lulled to rest by the roar of the winds. I have frequently seen the decks of the vessel scrubbed with the mud from this spot. It is soapy, and its cleansing properties remarkable. There are no streams in the locality emptying into the Gulf, and the mud of the Sabine river to the northward contains none of the properties here found. If there is oil, it comes from the bottom surface. The place is termed the 'oil spot,' not from any known analysis of its nature, but simply from its condition; it has no troubled water. During three-fourths of the year the neighborhood of the oil spot is the Olympus of the mosquito."

more water, and let boil until quite tender. Cut the fruit in halves, scoop out the middle with a spoon, pinch out seeds and white skin; cut the rinds into chips, take a pint of the first water the oranges were boiled in, add to the sugar chips and pulp, and, after it has come to a boil, let it simmer until clear. To every dozen oranges add the juice of three lemons.

I will add, I believe the manufacturing of orange marmalade would prove a great success and a paying business. It is very wholesome.

Women as Insurance Risks.

In an issue where, as is the case with the present one, the female branch of the Order is quite well represented, not only by Lodge locals, but also Degree of Honor correspondence in general, and touching on the beneficiary feature, a few thoughts concerning women as insurance risks, will be quite appropriate.

Interesting researches concerning the comparative longevity of men and women in Europe have recently been made by the Director of the Bureau of Statistics at Vienna. From these it appears that about a third more women than men reach advanced age. Women oftener than men lead quiet, regular lives. They have fewer bad habits; are less exposed to strong passions and excitement. It appears from the gathered statistics of the world, says the "Modern Age," that women have a greater tenacity of life than men. Nature worships the female in all its varieties. Among insects the male perishes at a relatively early period. In plants the seminate blossoms die earliest, and are produced in the weaker limbs. Female quadrupeds have more endurance than males. In the human race, despite the intellectual and physical strength of the man, the woman endures longest, and will bear pain to which the strong man succumbs. Zymotic diseases are more fatal to males, and more male children die than females. Deverga asserts that the proportion dying suddenly is about 100 women to 780 men; 1080 men in the United States in 1870 committed suicide, to 285 women. Intemperance, apoplexy, gout, hydrocephalus, affections of the heart or liver, scrofula, paralysis, are far more fatal to males than females.

Pulmonary consumption, on the other hand, is more deadly to the latter, which argues that we ought to give the girls of our families all the outdoor exercise that they need. Females in cities are more prone to consumption than in the country. All old countries, not disturbed by emigration, have a majority of females in the population. In royal families the statistics show more daughters than sons. The Hebrew woman is exceptionally long-lived, while the colored man is exceptionally short-lived. The married state is favorable to the prolongation of life among women. Dr. Hough remarks that there are from 2 to 6 per cent more males born than females, yet there is more than 6 per cent excess of females in the living populations. The rush and worry of the average business man in this country is apt to make him prematurely old, unless he takes judicious recreation. The females are to a great extent exempt from this overstraining about business cares, which may in a degree account for their superior vitality.

Needed Legislation.

As a rule our legislative bodies give us too much legislation. Changes, especially in our fundamental law, are always to be deplored, except when the necessity therefor is plainly apparent. Such a necessity it appears to us now exists in relation to the law governing re-instatement of persons holding final cards, and those standing suspended from the Order for either non-payment of assessments or Lodge dues; and also in the law regulating the liability of members on assessments.

Our Representatives to the Supreme Lodge are charged by our Grand Lodge to use their best endeavors to effect a change in these laws. In regard to the first they will have a substitute to take the place of the one now in force; which was submitted to our Grand Lodge by our Grand Recorder and received the unanimous endorsement of the committee to whom it was referred, and also of the Grand Lodge itself. We hope this proposed law will be passed. Under the law as it now is, the Lodges are at the time going wrong. They do not understand it, and scarcely two construe it alike. Even men learned in the law differ in regard to it. Let us have something more plain and explicit.

In relation to the other proposed amendment we desire to say that in our opinion no greater benefit could be conferred on the Order by the Supreme Lodge than by its adoption. Its effect would be to do away with all exemption from assessments of Master Workmen in good standing, no matter when or how they became members of the Order, or of any Lodge. In nine cases out of ten a member after joining the Order expects to pay the next assessment that is levied after he becomes a Master Workman, as in justice he ought, and feels disappointed when informed that he is not liable till an assessment is levied on a death that occurred after he received the Master Workman degree. The moment a person is admitted to full membership in the Order he is as fully protected as one who has been a member for years, and should share with the rest the burden that provides assurance to all alike. But the injustice of the present law is not its worst feature. It is the source of more labor, perplexity and errors in accounts than all other laws combined. It is the one great exception to the general simplicity of our statutes under which we are constantly working. Strike out this exemption clause and the work of our Financiers will be materially lessened, their tempers preserved, and their accounts relieved from the most fruitful source of errors. Let it be done!

Degree of Honor.

Gradually the fact is becoming apparent to our Degree of Honor Lodges that their existence depends on embracing the beneficiary feature of the Degree. Applications for certificates come straggling in to the office of the Grand Recorder, and if report be true many more are on, or about to be on the way. Energetic action in this regard cannot be taken too soon. The novelty and social features of the Degree will keep a Lodge in a prosperous condition for a time, but novelty soon wears off, and sociability does not always last, nor last always, and so it comes to pass that in the fullness of time the Lodge languishes and dies. But the wish to protect those near and dear to us is an ever present and everlasting desire. It only ceases with life itself. United for such a holy purpose, we have a bond of union too strong for ordinary circumstances to break.

There is now an opportunity for much good work to be done in connection with this Degree. In nearly every city, village and hamlet in the State we have Subordinate Lodges. It is fair to say that in connection with one third of these, could be organized D. of H. Lodges made up largely of beneficial members. This would swell the number of these organizations to 75. We ought to have at least so many, and can have if Deputies will only half work. The cost is not very much. The Grand Lodge gets $25 for a set of supplies, and the organizing Deputy is entitled to $15 as his fee—$40 in all. This is to a Lodge as such. The cost to individuals is: Membership fee, not less than $1. If a beneficial member, add for medical examination, $2; for beneficiary certificate, $1; and for first beneficiary payment, $1. After that the payments will be 50 cents per month for the beneficiary fund and the dues as fixed by the Lodge. The benefit guarantee is $500, when 500 members belong in the beneficiary class—till then, $1 for each member. Constitutions and information will be furnished on application to the Grand Recorder.

Progress in Illustrations.

During the last decade more than in any that has preceded it, the spirit of enlightened and popular journalism has advanced in pictorial illustrations both as to quality and quantity. Cartoons, caricatures, sketches of our mountain and valley scenery, portraits of public men and notable characters are laid at our doors each day. A panorama is held up to our view that gives a vivid view of the world as it is, and of the prominent actors therein.

Occupying the position that we do as publishers of several periodicals for fraternal and beneficiary societies, we have endeavored to make the fraternal press equal to and in keeping with the spirit of this enlightened age.

These humane societies that are building up our commonwealth are fostered and promoted by some of our leading citizens, who in a spirit of philanthropy are giving their time, talent and the best years of their life in promoting them. We deem it but a just tribute to such nobility of character that these men shall have some lasting recognition of their services by giving pen sketches and life-like portraits of them in our fraternal press. Following this plan, we expect to present portraits of a number of leading fraternal society men in our different issues during this year.

PAST GRAND MASTER BARNES left for the East last Thursday. He will be present part of the time at the Supreme Lodge K. of H., in Chicago (of which Order in this State he is Grand Dictator), will next go to visit old family friends in Georgia, and thence will go to Toronto, Canada, to be present at our Supreme Lodge which meets June 3d.

THERE are three assessments for May in the Supreme Jurisdiction.

THE Toronto Lodges have appropriated $500 for the entertainment of the Supreme Lodge meeting in that city June 3d.

DR. M. W. FISH, Supreme Master Workman, will leave for the Supreme Lodge about May 20th.

THE Supreme Master Workman is busily engaged in making out his annual report. Among the recommendations that it will contain will be one for a modification of the relief law regarding the advancing of the maximum rate of assessments in the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction. He will also recommend to strike out from Art. VI, Sec. 8, of the Supreme Lodge Constitution the words in parenthesis, which are—"provided such member has rectified his certificate prior to the date of the death on which the assessment is made."

The Beneficiary in the D. of H.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—In talking with some of the members of the D. of H. the opinion was expressed that the beneficiary feature of the Degree of Honor could be much improved. I agree with them and believe that if the sisters and brothers of the Degree of Honor were placed on the same footing as Master Workmen of the Subordinate Lodges, that is to say, those that desired (and can pass the necessary medical examination), to become beneficiary members of the Order, the Degree of Honor would be made more effective. Why should it not be? Will it not be a great power for good in the A. O. U. W. if all its members can receive its benefits in full? My opinion is that the beneficiary should be for $2,000, and that members of the Degree of Honor could, if they so desired, take out beneficiary certificates for the said sum of $2,000, and as M. W.'s take a beneficiary also of $2,000, thus making the total beneficiary $4,000, payable at death; and the sisters' $2,000, payable as they may direct; the assessments to be collected in the same manner as in the Subordinate Lodges of the A. O. U. W. I commend this idea to all Workmen, believing this will be the means of doing good and of extending the benefits of our great and noble Order. F. B.

EXCELSIOR LECTURE COURSE.—The second of the admirable series of lectures given under the auspices of "Golden Dawn," D. of H., No. 10, will be delivered in Excelsior Hall, 2319 Mission street, on Thursday evening, May 15th, by Silas A. White Esq., Principal of the Valencia Street Grammar School. Mr. White was formerly one of the most active and energetic members of Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, and his short impromptu discourses before this Lodge, and also Golden Dawn, of which he was also a distinguished member, were always listened to with attention and profit. The subject he has selected for this more elaborate effort is "Our Hearths and Homes in the Old Times and the New," and we have no doubt that he will invest it with a great deal of interest and advantage to his old associates in the Order, and that they will all be glad to welcome him among them once more. A cordial invitation is extended not only to the brothers and sisters of the above Lodges, but also to the members of the Order at large, and those of the other fraternal Societies meeting in Excelsior Hall. Admission to this lecture, free. On Thursday evening, May 29th, the third and last of this series will be delivered by Mr. Walter M. Leman, subject, "The Drama and the Stage," and to this, an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged, to defray necessary and incidental expenses.

Good News for Our Oregon, W. T. and British Columbia Brethren.

The Lodge Visitor, a fraternal paper heretofore published at Portland, Oregon, principally in the interests of the A. O. U. W. and K. of P., has disposed of its good will and subscription lists to the publishers of this journal, and we will hereafter supply its subscribers for their unexpired terms with the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN or PYTHIAN TRIANGLE-RECORD, or and will give liberal compensation to the right persons. Beginning with next issue, we shall try (with the aid of our northern brothers) to make a specialty of the local Lodge news of Oregon, Washington Territory and British Columbia. The influence of a good Lodge paper is reciprocal. In helping us you help yourself and your Lodge. To you of Oregon, Washington Territory and B. C., who read this, the invitation is addressed to send us news concerning your Lodge in time for our next issue, and the most valuable advertising mediums on the Coast. Our readers and correspondents in California will only be glad to know that they are through the WATCHMAN to be more intimately still allied to the entire Pacific coast and the great Northwest. Our paper has room for all. Our fraternity extends, and is the same in the East as the West and it is fitting that the WATCHMAN should be our grand organ for not only California, but for the jurisdictions of Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, Washington Ter-

Oregon and W. T. News.

INTEGRITY LODGE, of Walla Walla, gave its anniversary hop last month.

THE Workmen of Dayton, W. T., gave a dance to celebrate their anniversary.

A NEW Lodge was recently organized at Sauver's Station, Oregon, which promises to be a good one.

WALLA WALLA LODGE celebrated its fourth anniversary recently. There was a large attendance, and a good time.

SINCE Grand Recorder Newcomb returned to his home in Roseburg, Or., from his California trip his health is much improved.

FIDELITY Lodge, No. 4, East Portland, holds her ground well, losing no members by withdrawal or suspension, and is occasionally taking in a new member.

BROOKLYN Lodge, No. 7, though located in an out-of-the-way part of East Portland, and not often visited by members of other Lodges, still holds its own, and indeed is growing in membership.

THE dance and supper given some time since by the Workmen, at Coupeville, W. T., was one to be long remembered by those who were fortunate enough to attend. There were about 120 persons present.

THE proposed Supreme Lodge excursion promises to be a success. Under the direction of such men as Past Grand Master Childs, Grand Master Bradshaw and Grand Recorder Newcomb, it could hardly be anything else.

WE hope to have the Lodge cards of all Lodges in this jurisdiction properly enrolled in our directory by next issue. Will Recorders kindly send us the necessary data, and also any correspondence of interest concerning their Lodges.

WE are told that several of the A. O. U. W. Lodges of Portland are discussing the subject of combining forces and consolidating. The plan has been fully discussed and pronounced a poor one in this city. The saving aimed at in running expenses etc., is more than offset by the waning of interest among the membership in general. Two small but vigorous Lodges are better far than one big sleepy one.

Brethren, Act on the Square.

To our brethren of the press, both fraternal and secular, both Eastern and Western, we sometimes feel inclined to enter a complaint. This is one of those times. The case especially in point that brings the subject uppermost at the present time is in regard to the prize poems on "Fraternity," especially contracted for, published and paid for by us. We are glad to see that their merits are recognized and our judgment endorsed by the extensive reproduction they have received in the press, but it is a fact that in fully half the journals in which we have seen them, they appear without a line of credit to the paper from which they are originally taken, and readers are left to infer that the lines are contributed especially to the journal in which they find them. Thus said journals deprive us of just credit, and arrogate to themselves credit that is not at all their due.

There is a certain amount of adaptation of news items, and working over of matter, (which from its nature might be considered as common property), that has come to be looked upon in the journalistic world as allowable, and, this being the case, we have no special fault to find at this time in that direction. But when journals will appropriate bodily whole editorials or broadside columns of news, or especially contributed literary matter, without giving credit or without consent either of the author or publisher, as is too frequently done, they exceed the bounds of journalistic propriety and descend to bald literary piracy.

any other of the fraternal organs they may desire, that are published by us, and hereinafter named, giving them month for month, either of these papers for their old claims.

The Lodge Visitor in its latest form, and formerly as the Pacific Overseer, has tested to its entire satisfaction the profit and loss attendant upon conducting a fraternal newspaper on the northern Pacific coast, and has now concluded to let this office, with its corps of fraternal organs, try the field and see if it can do any better. With facilities for publishing fraternal newspapers unequalled by any firm on this coast, we are satisfied that we can occupy this field to the advantage and profit of all concerned, if the Lodges will only co-operate with us and give us their aid.

We want good agents and correspondents in every Lodge in the aforementioned jurisdiction,

PYTHIAN TRIANGLE-RECORD, FRATERNAL RECORD, devoted to all standard Orders on this coast. The MASONIC RECORD, all 16-page semi-monthlies, at $2 per year; or the KNIGHTS OF HONOR JOURNAL, the INDEPENDENT RECORD, organ of the I. O. C. F. on this coast, and the AMERICAN LEGION OF HONOR RECORD, all 16-page monthlies, at $1 per year.

This new departure gives us additional power for good, both to the Order and to our advertisers, and makes the WATCHMAN one of future departments of news of the Order in Oregon and W. T. These cuts give some glimpses of the grand scenery of that country as well as some ideas concerning distinctive branches of industry there.

MULINOMAH LODGE, No. 48, of Portland, has about $300 in its sick fund. It is the only Lodge in the city that pays sick benefits. Their numbers are increasing steadily and surely. They meet every Monday night, at Red Men's Hall.

A. O. U. W. LODGE DIRECTORY.

Journeymen Workmen will find this Directory valuable for reference. It will enable all who visit different places so to time their journey as to enable them to visit the various Lodges in the districts they visit. Let no good brother who can, fail to visit Lodges when possible. Attend at many different Lodges as you can, and you will be paid for so doing every time, brothers.

Cards inserted in this list at the rate of 25 cents per month, payable semi-annually in advance. If errors or omissions are noticed, please write the office direct.

Eve y Member of the A. O. U. W.
Should subscribe for the "Pacific
States Watchman."

It is officially recommended by the Order on the Pacific coast.

Splendidly illustrated, reliable and chaste.
The WATCHMAN is published semi-monthly—on the 2d and 4th Saturday of each month.

It is one of the best home and family papers on the coast and this feature commends it to all Workmen and all members of their families.

The subscription price is only $2 per year, payable in advance.

It is a worthy representative of the Order, a profitable companion for every member to read and consult, and a friend that each can take pride in recommending to readers everywhere. Its circulation has been of immense benefit to our noble Order and many of its individual members, who read and patronize its many enterprising and sterling issues. All Workmen should lend it a helping voice and hand.

Advertisers will find it one of the best means of reaching a class of readers, including many Workmen and others who are large buyers in the aggregate.

Good Agents are wanted at all times, to whom large commissions will be paid.

SAMPLE copies sent free for circulation and examination with a view of increasing its subscription list.

Some Parliamentary Rules.

The following rules compiled by the Texas Siftings for the benefit of its Legislature are published here not from any idea that the parliamentarians of our Lodges and Councils are in need of them or may gather instruction therefrom, but from the hope that they may find some grains of amusement therein:

Never kick a man when he is down. It tends to create a confusion, breeds animosity and musses up the floor. The better way is to let your opponent up to his feet get him headed toward the front door and shoot him in the back just as he is going out.

Never pull off your coat hastily in the heat of argument and throw it on the floor. You are liable to break the bottle in your pocket. In rising to a question of privilege pass your revolver to the man sitting on your left in order to show that you intend to take no undue advantage. A motion to table the chairman and pound him into a proper sense of his true position and what is due to the convention is always in order.

A motion to put out the lights is the same as to adjourn, and consequently, always in order. With the lights out, obnoxious resolutions can be secretly destroyed, bills stolen for alteration, and heads put on different members of the opposition.

Never play football with the Chaplain's hat when he rises to open proceedings with prayer. Remember he is not a member of your body, but appears ex necessitate, in a purely ministerial capacity, the same as he would visit any other set of cannibalistic heathen, and in the same missionary spirit. If he pours any oil on the troubled waters, remember he may have saved a life that day, and give him due credit. A Chaplain is always an important adjunct to a well regulated penitentiary.

When you have decided to call another member a liar, remember you must do it by proxy, that is, through the proper channel, which is the Chairman or Speaker of the house. You cannot address the member personally and say, "You are a liar, sir, and a thoroughbred scoundrel from your boot-tops to your hair roots!" That would never do in the world, and might expose your ignorance and irritate the member addressed. Conkling, Blaine, Ben Butler nor Joe Blackburn never did that. At least, if they did, there has been a terrible misprint in the Congressional records.

No, you should do all this parliamentary monkey work through the Chairman or Speaker, something in this style:

"Mr. Speaker! Mr. Speaker! I say, Mr. Speaker! Confound the measly hubbub, can't I attract that Speaker's attention? If you boy's would only let up a minute, I'd like to catch the Speaker's eye. He don't seem to know me nor want to recognize me, and the cuss owes me $25 on that jack-pot he opened last night. Mr. Speaker—ha—you see me do you, you shackle-jawed lunk-head? Well I desire to call the attention of this house through you, to the irresistible and self-evident proposition that the gentleman who has just completed a long and disgustingly vulgar and uncalled for address to this house is a white-livered whelp from away back, a man that would lie when the truth wouldn't convict half so quick, and one who is so utterly devoid of the first pretensions to true manhood that the dogs in the street instinctively recognize in him a brother brute, and sniff at his heels as he staggers on between the gin-mill and these Legislative halls. Mr. Speaker, I desire you to communicate these honest expressions of supreme contempt to the alleged member who has just stumbled into his seat, with my compliments. It is against the rules of the house for me to address him, and I'm glad of it. Mr. Speaker, I will now yield the floor and call on the Sergeant-at-arms to clear the gallery of ladies, as I am quite sure the onery member to whom I have just casually alluded is going to again shoot off his mammoth mouth."

The Onward March of Secret Fraternities.

The following, which we commend to our readers as very interesting fraternal reading, is an outline of an address delivered by Prof. H. B. Norton of the State Normal School, at the "house-warming" of the San Jose Masonic Lodges, given last St. John's Day, when they moved into their new quarters in the elegant and recently constructed Masonic Hall in that city:

He commenced his address by saying that he desired to speak more particularly to those who were not identified with the Order under whose auspices this magnificent temple of Masonry has been thrown open, to the end of correcting, so far as possible, whatever of misapprehension, prejudice and falsehood is connected with the manner in which the world has looked upon secret Orders.

We take up the history of Egypt as it was ages ago and contrast it with the sunshine of the society of to-day. We see the people of Egypt lying in crushing despair, helpless slaves, bleeding under the lash of the taskmaster. The great multitude of the people in those days sold not only their possessions, but their bodies and souls to the kings, in order to live in an era of profound darkness. They worshiped crocodiles and the loathsome beetles that creep in the slime of the rivers. In those days a secret Order inhabited its own halls under the Pyramids, and celebrated its mysterious rites. History forgot its name. Hymns were sung in those sacred halls. In its ark, divine mysteries were carried unstained to a broader and more universal development. During the middle ages we find secret Orders carrying down to the future the same high standard which had been set up in the earlier times.

The deeds of the Knights of the Temple and of the Hospital form a wonderful and thrilling story. This we know in its essential outlines, which were those of simplicity and chastity. The causes were the noblest which can enlist the attention of man. The banner of the Cross was upheld by the Knights of St. John when the wave of Moslem invasion lifted its highest crest. If we have freedom to-day to live and labor, it is because of the forefathers who gave their swords and lives against darkness and wrong. We of modern days are dwelling in happy times. No shadow of invasion rests upon the horizon. Freedom has a broad domain. But there is still work for the fraternal societies to do. Despotism still reigns in a measure, and the growth of civil and religious liberty is not complete. Every victorious war has largely been the work of secret associations of men, who have given to enlightenment and to the world rich offering of true liberty. There is still much to do.

It is asked sometimes, why these organizations should be continued, when we have the school-house on one side and the church-spire pointing heavenward on the other. It is said that in view of this universal spread of enlightenment and Christianity, it seems that those mysteries which were celebrated in the old dark ages may well be dispensed with. In reply, it may be affirmed that the world moves on. Many of the old dangers confront us. Danger overhangs every one of us. Our lives and schemes are cut short without warning. The progress of society is steady. Society lives, but the individual unit perishes. We have around us our wives and children, who are dearer to us than our heart's blood. We desire that they be cared for when we are taken away. Hence the necessity of these organizations.

Those who criticize the character of secret Orders, as anti-fraternity, know not what they say. If such would learn what were the real proceedings at the Lodge meetings, if they knew how often the widow and the orphan were given solace and support by these secret Orders, they would probably be silenced for all time. The system of fraternal aid has spread in many directions and each of the various Orders is conferring undoubted benefit upon society. Meantime supplied in case of the death of the husband and father, and in addition to this, the objects of these organizations include the cultivation of fraternal love and education and noble thought. The United Workmen and the Templars are lineal descendants of Masonry and to each and all we extend the hand of fellowship. We salute them as children of the rising sun. It is a good work which they are doing and God speed them in it. The work which was commenced in danger, and continued in difficulty is extending to over-growing good. There is no room for suspicion or hatred behind the penetralia of Masonry, and it would be well for all who can to avail themselves of the benefits which are freely offered. It is welding into one harmonious whole the scattered fragments of humanity. We are grateful to-night for the privilege of a reunion in this beautiful temple, and to its managers we extend our thanks, while we wish them a high, grand and noble future.

Degree of Honor.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Allow me to say a few words in behalf of this, the side degree of the A. O. U. W.; intended as it is to meet the wishes of many members of the Order, that fraternal gatherings may take place in which members, their wives and sisters may take part, and that a beneficiary of $500 additional may be had not only by the members of the A. O. U. W., but also the female portion of the family. In many instances in the case of the death of a mother, wife or sister, the head of the family would suffer as much as though the husband died, especially where there are children left. While the head of the family would be out earning the wherewithal to feed and clothe the children, care must be taken of the little ones and additional expense incurred at home. Therefore the beneficiary feature works as well in the female as in the male portion of a family.

It is to be regretted that only 29 Lodges have been formed in the last four years, and many of these are on the decline. The reason for the decline is that many Lodges ignore the beneficiary feature and only participate as social societies.

Allow me to state in this connection that the largest, most prosperous and best attended Lodges having most money and where fraternity really exists, are found in the Lodges paying weekly sick benefits. Take as an example, Unity, Yerba Buena, Magnolia and Harmony Lodges of this city, each with a membership of over 300, their meetings well attended and interesting, and not one of them that has not a bank account of upwards of $5,000. This, Mr. Editor, is proof only that the beneficiary should be made a feature in earnest of the Degree of Honor. Another reason why the D. of H. is on the decline, is that single Lodges of the A. O. U. W. have organized a Lodge and debarred others not members of their particular Lodge from joining. The formation of Degree of Honor Lodges should be formed by two or more Lodges joining together, especially where there are a number of Lodges in one district. At Sacramento a flourishing D. of H. Lodge exists, as the two Lodges in that city have united; so it is at Oakland, Los Angeles, San Jose and other places.

One month ago District No. 1 of this city, comprised of San Francisco, Unity, Magnolia and Spartan appointed a committee to consider the advisability of forming a D. of H. Lodge, and the result is that Union Lodge, No. 29, D. of H., has been instituted in District No. 1, and has just closed its charter with 91 members, and many applications on file, among the number being Grand Master McClure. Several meetings ago the Grand Overseer joined this new subordinate. Many of the members of Union, No. 29, will take out beneficiary certificates, and it no doubt will prosper.

Now that each of the four districts of this city have a Degree of Honor Lodge, it behooves the District Deputies just appointed to see that the Degree of Honor Lodges in their districts will be worked up and new life given them, which can be done by getting the Lodges in each district interested to make the Degree of Honor Lodge of their district a success, not only in numbers, but socially and beneficially at the same time.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Reception to the Grand Overseer by Spartan, No. 36.

On Friday evening, the 3d instant, there was a large attendance in Spartan's Lodge room. It had been whispered about that Brother Danforth, G. O., would be given a good send-off for his Eastern trip. After the usual routine of the business of the Lodge had been finished, a part of which was to confer the M. W. Degree on two candidates, a procession was formed for a march to Campi's. Here a company of 50 sat down to a good collation in the banquet room. The supper was followed by congratulatory and complimentary speeches and sentiments to Workmen generally, and especially to the Grand Overseer. Brother I. E. Alexander, P. M. W.; Eugene N. Duprey, O.; Judge Robert Farrell, E. M. Reading, P. M. W.; Wm. Wilson, P. M. W.; Dr. G. G. Burnett, Geo. Jordon, P. M. W.; Geo. Robinson, Brother Howland, B. F. Clement, M. W.; the WATCHMAN representative and others participated in this—one of the most pleasant Order events of the season.

Friendship, No. 179.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Friendship, No. 179, was agreeably surprised Wednesday evening by a visit from Brother Watson, Deputy Grand Recorder. Under the head of "Good of the Order," Brother Watson gave the most interesting lecture on the financial workings of the Order ever listened to by this Lodge. His remarks were listened to with great attention, and the liveliest interest was manifested as he explained several laws of the Order that had not been clearly understood in our Lodge heretofore. For talking straight to the point in issue, and using the fewest words possible, we think Brother Watson has few equals in the Order.

R. B. KILFREDGE,

S. F., April 23d.

Recorder.

Golden Dawn, No. 10. D. of H.

Remember the lecture to be delivered under the auspices of this Lodge at Excelsior Hall, 2319 Mission street, next Thursday evening. The subject is "Improvements about our Hearths and Homes—or the Old Times and the New." The lecturer is Mr. S. A. White, principal of the Valencia Grammar School. Admission free.

Evening Star, No. 23. D. of H.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Evening Star, No. 23, D. of H., at their pleasant Lodge room—Unity Hall, No. 20 Eddy street—recently received a fraternal visit from the "baby Lodge" of the Degree of Honor, Union, No. 29, and it is a very strong baby for its age, being but two months old and numbering over 100 members and several propositions in for membership. After the work of the Lodge had been gone through, an impromptu entertainment was carried out, for nothing had been prepared, the visit of Union being unexpected. The programme was as follows: Miss Goldstone of Union Lodge, led off with a song; Mrs. Rathe, of the same Lodge, gave a song, after which one of the founders of Union made a short address. The C. of H. of Union, Mrs. Susie Goodey, then gave a song. The Lodge then, with its visitors, adjourned to the banquet hall and found spread for them refreshments. Here an address of welcome was delivered by Brother Blight, of Evening Star. Having done full justice to the good things placed before them, all returned to the Lodge room and continued the programme by a song from Brother Irving, which was given in his grand style which has made him a favorite in the Lodges of Workmen. A song was then given by one of the visiting sisters, whose name I did not learn, which I regret. It was that beautiful song "Birdie." Sister H. Fishbeck, of Evening Star, then sang with feeling, "Sleep well, thou sweet Angels." A song by Z. T. Whitten and remarks by other brothers and sisters brought the evening's entertainment to a close. The programme was well carried out and each of the sisters and brothers did their best to make the evening one of enjoyment, and it is known that they succeeded, as all present testified by expressing their desire that the visit of Union would be returned by Evening Star. The Degree of Honor is doing well in this city, and with the promise of a large increase of membership in the near future.

Union, No. 29, D. of H.

The meeting nights of this Lodge are looked forward to by its members in the anticipation of spending a pleasant social time and so far no one has been disappointed. Considering its short existence and the fact that none of the officers had ever been members of a Lodge (they are all ladies except the Watchmen), it is wonderful how evenly everything runs, the business being conducted without jar or confusion. The degree was conferred at the last meeting, April 24th, on seven candidates in a manner that would reflect credit on even veteran officers. Many of the brothers in our A. O. U. W. Lodges who have the advantage of years of experience, might well pattern after these little lady officers, who show what can be accomplished with application. Several visiting members were present. Brother Blight, of Evening Star, made a few well-timed remarks and suggestions, also extending an invitation to visit Evening Star. An invitation was also kindly tendered by Sister Lyle, C. of H. of Silver Spray, No. 3, to visit her Lodge. Union Lodge is indebted to this lady for many acts of courtesy in filling on several occasions the positions of absent officers and otherwise aiding the new Lodge. It is expected that in the not distant future, Union, No. 29, D. of H., will have a membership of 200. There is no reason why the other districts should not do as much or even outstrip District No. 1, as they have the advantage of D. of H. Lodges already organized.

Brooklyn, No. 3.

We are informed that the recent warm spell has broken the ice and melted the snow in this old subordinate to such an extent that a spring freshet has started in which threatens to culminate in a regular boom.

Oak Leaf, No. 35

A visit to this flourishing Oakland Lodge recently showed a good attendance and good work in conferring the M. W. degree on two candidates—the charge by the M. W., L. L. Wallace, being unusually impressive. The membership is constantly increasing, there being several applications on the table. The members of this Lodge seem to be alive to their duties and privileges, and are justly proud of their position.

Bay District, No. 226.

We visited this Lodge at Emery Station last Tuesday evening, and found quite a delegation there from the old hive from which the present membership swarmed—viz: Hearts of Oak, No. 61, of West Berkeley. The M. W. Degree was well conferred on one candidate and we are informed that several applications are now pending. Bay District, although a young and as yet a small Lodge, has adopted the sick benefit system and finds that it works well. Under "Good of the Order" remarks were made by the M. W., F. E. Corder and a number of visiting brothers.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Correspondence Concerning Los Angeles and the Arizona Jurisdiction.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—It has been some time since I have seen any article in your most valuable paper, from this county. Although I am not capable of writing an article as others here could on behalf of our beloved Order, yet I feel as though this section should be represented through your columns once in a while. I will state that the Order throughout the county is in the most flourishing condition, and all members are in high spirits, and all the Lodges in my district are increasing in membership every night of meeting. The majority of the applicants we are receiving are mostly young men from 21 to 30 years of age, all of whom have a desire of becoming Select Knights of the A. O. U. W., and all of whom must be Master Workmen of some loyal Lodge of A. O. U. W., before they can reach that step. In your last issue I saw an article headed "Select Knights, A. O. U. W.," where it is mentioned that Brother I. E. Alexander, P. M. W. of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, is taking steps to have instituted in San Francisco a Legion of said Select Knights. Also I see that the charter list is headed with the name of our most beloved brother, Grand Master Workman David McClure. Also Brother Alexander states that he thinks he will start a Legion with 200 charter members. I hope the brother will be able to increase the number to 400, for, dear brothers of the A. O. U. W., I speak from experience in regard to the Select Knights. The Supreme Lodge in my opinion did one of the grandest things in 1882 when it recognized said Select Knights, and I, as the first Select Commander of California, speak from experience, and I assure you as a Master Workman I would not say so if I did not think so, although when I spoke through the WATCHMAN of instituting the Select Knights some four months ago I was bitterly opposed by some. However, I will make this prophecy: Before two years California will have more Select Knights than any other jurisdiction where the A. O. U. W. exists. No doubt there are numbers of the brothers and representatives of the last Grand Lodge who may think it singular that Brother A. C. Doane and I withdrew the resolution we offered in the last Grand Lodge in regard to the Select Knights; but we being the only Select Knights on the Grand Lodge floor, thought it was policy, as we did not wish to cripple it in this jurisdiction by too hasty efforts. Brother W. A. Fox, Deputy Supreme Commander of northern California, will soon be in your city to institute a Legion or two, also in Oakland. Since I came home from the Grand Lodge I have made a flying trip through the Territory of Arizona, and I find the Order flourishing and increasing very rapidly there. Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico are struggling to increase their membership to 2,000, so as to be cut off from the Supreme Jurisdiction. I visited a Lodge in Phoenix, and the night I was there they received 15 applications. Also I visited Arizona Lodge, No. 1, at Tucson, and they received 19 applications. Also No. 3, at Tombstone, and they received 25 applications on that evening, and I assure you it made me feel good to see that our beloved Order, A. O. U. W., was increasing as it was. The day will come and is not far off when the A. O. U. W. will not be surpassed in numbers of membership by any Order. With my best wishes wherever the Order exists, I am,

Covenant, No. 97.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—This Lodge is in good working Order, as shown by the way two candidates received the J. W. Degree and one the M. W. Degree at its regular meeting on Wednesday evening, April 30th. The Master Workman, Brother C. A. Johnson, proved himself "letter-perfect," and considering that this was his first work in conferring the degrees he is certainly entitled to much credit. Brother F. M. Hoffman's appointment from this Lodge as District Deputy gives general satisfaction, as the brother is known to be honest, earnest and efficient. Auburn, May 1st. H.

Myers was elected to the chair of Foreman. I have nothing of importance to send you. The Lodge is doing well. We are not taking in any members. We are expecting Brother E. M. Reading to come up and give the people a stirring up. Brother J. N. Burke, our D. D. G. M. W., is very sick at this writing.

We are grieved to hear of the death by pneumonia of Brother John Bradley, Recorder of Union Lodge, No. 21, Sacramento. He was one of the best recording officers in the State, and a true and noble Workman. C. W. Baker has been elected to the vacancy caused by his death.

Half Moon Bay, No. 155.

This Lodge celebrated its fourth anniversary on May Day. A picnic was enjoyed in the afternoon, and in the evening the public hall and elegant Lodge room were thrown open and filled to overflowing. George W. Lovie, P. M. W., presided, and after welcoming the audience introduced E. F. Loud, D. G. M., who made appropriate remarks. Musical selections were ably rendered by Mrs. Souther, and an address delivered by William H. Barnes, P. G. M. The floor was then cleared for the dancing, and the adjoining Lodge room reserved for social converse and music. Supper was served during the evening. Delegations were present from the San Mateo, Redwood and other Lodges, and all united in agreeing that this reception was most creditable to all concerned.

SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

Magnolia, No. 6. D. of H.

Magnolia, No. 6, of the Degree of Honor, was never in so flourishing condition as at the present time, says the San Jose Herald. It being the largest social fraternity, and possessing among its numbers the most refined and cultured intellects as well as a galaxy of artists in music, elocution and oratory, the time is pleasantly and profitably spent 'neath the shades of the blooming Magnolia. The social given by its members are remarkably attractive and enjoyable. The latest being held in Champion Hall, on Tuesday evening, April 29th, the house was crowded to listen to the programme, to join in social converse, to enjoy the dance and partake of the sumptuous repast. The following exercises were excellently carried out: Recitation, "The Economical Wife," Miss Gracie Kamp; dance-song, Miss Helen Herrmann, was given in the usual bewitching style of that lady; select reading, "An Emigrant Story," Miss Rodgers, was read with much pathos; guitar solo, Miss Georgie Curtis, was one of the gems of the evening, and was received with loud applause; vocal duet, "I Live and Love Thee," Misses Clara Edmundson and Jennie Howard, was rendered in splendid voice, and responded to an encore with "I Cannot Sing that Song To-night," which elicited great applause; recitation, Broughton Búzzo, the comical character of the selection provoking much laughter. The programme was concluded with a vocal duet, "Lovely Moonlight," by Prof. Rainey and Miss Jennie McLeod, which was artistically rendered, to the enthusiastic delight of the audience who demanded an encore, which for want of preparation was not responded to. Dancing was then indulged in to the excellent music of Kaufman & Parkman, until supper was announced. Altogether the affair was one of the most enjoyable of the series, owing to the labors of the efficient committee, who spared no pains to secure the success so proverbial to the entertainments of the Magnolia Lodge.

Grand Lodge is the question of holding biennial sessions.

DURING the trip of the Deputy Grand Master Workman in Montana, a public meeting was held in Butte, owing to which fifteen applicants were received by the local Lodge the day following, and later in the trip, after a similar meeting at Wickes, Alta Lodge conferred the degrees on nineteen candidates.

WE are glad to learn through Brother Cobler's correspondence from Los Angeles, published elsewhere, that the Arizona jurisdiction is doing so well in point of gaining members. ## Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS U. S. and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

TWO WHEELED VEHICLE. Wm. T. Goodman, Fulton, Sonoma Co., Cal. No. 296,949. Dated April 15, 1884. This is an invention for preventing the rocking motion imparted to these vehicles by the joggling of the horse. The improvements consist in the arrangement and connection of springs, the means for mounting the body thereon, and a novel connection between the springs, axle and shaft. In this car the body may move readily independent of the springs to a certain degree. On account of the character of the springs themselves and the manner in which the body is hung, the vehicle is an easy riding one.

FAUCET.—Hugo Mattullath, S. F., assignor to Security Package Co. No. 296,031. Dated April 1, 1884. This is a screw-faucet, having a valve moving within it to close or open the outlet, a wheel and chambered sleeve fitting the exterior of the body and a screw cap, having smaller threads than those in the valve-stem, fits over the end of the faucet body and prevents the valves from being screwed entirely out. By this invention the faucet is first screwed on until properly sealed. The sleeve is then turned until the discharge nozzle stands in the proper position.

GREEN CORN CUTTING MACHINE.—George A. Roberts, Walla Walla, W. T. No. 296,066. Dated April 1, 1884. This machine is one designed to cut green corn from the cob, or roasting ear, for canning and other purposes and known as "Green Corn Cutting Machine." It consists in a combination of devices, in which an expanding annular knife operates in conjunction with an impaling bar.

GRAIN SEPARATOR.—Pontalia L. Nash, Hollister. No. 295,668. Dated March 25, 1884. The improvements covered by this patent mainly consist of certain details of construction difficult of intelligent description without the aid of engravings.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose or hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

REMEMBER

.....THAT THE.....

People's Railway Shares of Capital Stock

Are being Offered. 36,000 Bona Fide Subscriptions have been Taken.

A PUBLIC OFFER

INTELLIGENCE OF CALIFORNIA.

All Things Must Have a Beginning.

With this Company a sound and grand start has been, without any public efforts on its part made. This is best evidenced by the subscriptions already taken. There can be no longer doubt to the good faith of the project and the way the people of the Coast have so far quietly placed their shoulders one by one to the wheel, that within 30 days the whole allotment, 120,000 shares, will be taken. It is he who participates in an enterprise at its inception that is recognized to be wise.

Remember that the allotment is 120,000 shares, and that promptness in action will be the means of reaching it.

Remember if this fails to become a people's institution, or its popularity maintained, you will be to blame.

Remember that it is your duty as a citizen to take two shares, which can be carried at a cost of $2.50 per month; and when final cash payment is made, that your cash investment will have doubled itself.

Public Subscriptions—A Public Offer.

An honest and earnest appeal to the people who are willing and will protect themselves by building, owning, operating and maintaining a railroad of their own with an unlimited mileage but limited capital stock $20,000 per mile. This will be found to be the place where money invested will reap its sure reward. The Company guarantees every subscriber who takes of this allotment of stock 10 per cent per annum; by selling the stock at 65 and redeeming in transportation at $1.

Remember we are in earnest, and the people are believed to be the same.

The first 300 miles of this road will run through the finest producing counties in the State.

Certificate of Incorporation.

STATE OF INDIANA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. R. Meyers, Secretary of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that the Articles of Incorporation of The People's Railway Company of America were filed in this office July 2, 1883.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Indiana, at the city of Indianapolis, this 24 day of July, A. D. 1883.

W. R. MEYERS, Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 8, 1883.

Emi Kennedy, Esq., President People's Railway Company of America, Indianapolis, Indiana:

Sir—I am in receipt, through reference by the Hon. Acting Secretary of the Interior, of your letter of 31st ultimo, transmitting articles of incorporation and due proofs of organization of the People's Railway Company of America, and am directed to inform you that the same are in proper form and satisfactory to the Department. They have accordingly been placed on file.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

What they say who can speak understandingly:
"The railroads here claim that there are now enough facilities to meet the want. This is all well enough when they can divide twelve per cent profit, or more, and make their owners rich. It all comes out of the people, and yet the people are humbugged to believe what they say. Facts are stubborn things to contend with."

"The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad is four hundred and forty miles from New York City to Buffalo, and its gross earnings last year were $55,000 per mile. I assess it as an asset through this township. I know it divided thirteen millions last year; its pay-roll $500,000 per month; its income twenty-four millions per annum. Your project will be equally as profitable if managed in the right way."
C. J. T., New York.

Sensible Views.

Mr. C. M. E. Schroeder, a stockholder, President of the Germania Saving Bank of Jersey City, was approached by a reporter for the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, concerning The People's Railway Company, to whom he said:
"The scheme is a good and wise one, and he had no doubt it would be profitable to the investors. The road, he said, would cost $25,000, double track, a mile. Forty pound steel rail would be used, and the cars would be built cheaper than those in ordinary use, and having the support of the people all along the line, it can not fail to pay. The road was to be built on the INSTALLMENT PLAN."

The People's Railway.

The managers of the above company are taking hold of the work in earnest. They intend to build about 4,000 miles of track. Should this prove successful the Pacific Coast will, in a few years, have a line that will rapidly cut down the prices of freight and travel. Good men are at the head of the company. If good names are a guarantee of good faith, then surely the new company starts with every assurance of success. We wish them well. The time will come, perhaps has come, when common people of the United States will own railroads and telegraph lines. Everything lies in the management of the new company. It should be so arranged that no one or two or half-dozen individuals could obtain a controlling share of the stock. The cheapest and most successful insurance organizations to-day are those formed for mutual benefit and profit, and include a large number of the members. If such organizations will work in one case they will in another. If proper officers are elected, and they act in good faith and to the best interests of the stockholder, there will be no trouble in obtaining all the money that will be required.—Butte County (Cal.) Register.

An Interview by a Press Reporter With a Great Railroad Builder Concerning the People's Railway Company of America.

"What do you think Col. Lane, of this stupendous narrow gauge railroad scheme across the Continent, from 'ocean to ocean and from the gulf to the lake?'"

"That it is an entirely feasible scheme, and will, doubtless, succeed, as narrow gauge lines can, by paralleling, bankrupt the standard gauges."

"Will you permit me to inquire as to relative cost of standard and narrow gauges?"

"Certainly. I have some experience in the construction and operating of both gauges, and have been an advocate of narrow gauge roads for ten or more years. By actual experience I am enabled to say that the cost of building a broad gauge road is two-fifths more than the cost of a narrow gauge, and this ratio of cost applies as well to the grading, cross-tying and railing. The cost is about according to the respective gauges."

Annual Report of the Finance Committee.

Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of California We, your Committee, would respectfully report, that since the last session of the Grand Lodge, we have examined, each month, the books and vouchers of the Grand Recorder, and each quarter, those of the Grand Receiver and found them correct and neatly kept.

Your Committee would also report that in compliance with the laws they invited proposals for printing and stationery for the current year and sent specifications to several firms.

And upon examination we found A. L. Bancroft & Co. to be the lowest and most reliable and the contract was awarded them at previous rates.

We suggest to the members present and ask them to impress upon their Lodges the necessity of their sending a full and correct remittance report of each sum of money sent to the Grand Recorder, as that is the only check your committee have on the receipts of that office. We admit there has been quite a change for the better in the reports of the last year, but believe there is yet room for improvement.

In conclusion we return our thanks to Bros. Pratt, Haile and Watson for the kind and courteous manner in which they have received and assisted us.

E. H. MORGAN,
PHILIP PECK,
JAS. J. HAYES,

Committee on Finance and Mileage.

Prospectus of the A. O. U. W. Hall Association.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 7, 1884.

Dear Sir and Brother: For five years have the members of the A. O. U. W. been agitating the question of a home for the Order in this city, which now has twenty-three A. O. U. W. Lodges, with over 6,000 members, and five Degree of Honor Lodges.

In January each Lodge in the city elected a Delegate to a meeting held for the purpose of consultation in reference to the advisability of the A. O. U. W. procuring a home of its own. It was the unanimous opinion, as the sense of the meeting, that steps should be taken towards purchasing a lot and building a hall. The matter was referred back to the Lodges for their indorsements, and each Lodge returned a Delegate with instructions that an A. O. U. W. Hall Association should be incorporated. On the 13th day of February, the A. O. U. W. Hall Association was incorporated with twenty-six Directors and a capital of $100,000, divided into 10,000 shares, at $10 per share. By-laws for the government of the association were adopted and are now in print, and can be had by applying to the Secretary or any of the Directors.

The Directors adopted a resolution to the effect that the building should be for the Order, and stock should only be sold to members of the Order. Immediately on the organization of the Board of Directors, subscription lists were placed in the Lodges, and after several meetings upwards of $25,000 was subscribed towards the A. O. U. W. Hall Association stock.

A committee was appointed on lots, and many were submitted and considered at the meetings of the Directors, and on Saturday evening, April 26th, the Directors selected the lot on the north side of O'Farrell street, between Mason and Taylor; size, 55 feet front by 137.6 feet deep, to rear street, covered by a church, for the sum of $25,500, and the President and Secretary were authorized to arrange for its purchase, which has been done and a deposit paid.

McLANE'S IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS.

It is proposed to erect a building on the lot, with suitable offices for the Grand Lodge Officers, etc., a public hall, and Lodge rooms to accommodate the A. O. U. W. and Degree of Honor Lodges meeting down town. It is proposed that the entire expense of lot, building and fixtures, shall not exceed $75,000, and that the revenue derived therefrom for rent of Lodge-rooms, hall and offices, will pay a better interest than money deposited in savings banks, and will be more secure, as well as being an honor to the great and flourishing Order of which we are all proud to be members. It is expected that sufficient stock will be sold within the next sixty days to cover the amount required, and that only stock enough will be sold to raise the amount necessary. Brothers of the Order are invited to lend a helping hand, and enable this Order to have a home that may be called its own, and in which its Lodges may meet, and derive for themselves the benefit of the rent they are paying out to others.

Subscriptions will be received by any of the Recorders of the several Lodges, also the Hall Director of each Lodge, and the Secretary of the Association, who will receipt therefor. The Association has been given the use of the Relief Committee rooms, 32 O'Farrell street, for an office, and the Secretary of the A. O. U. W. Hall Association will be present at certain hours of each day and evening, to receipt for subscriptions and for the collection of installments. Fraternally yours,

An Improved Surgical Appliance.

Among the many things for which we of this generation should be thankful are the improvements in anatomical implements. A great deal of ingenuity and inventive talent has been expended on this class of appliances. Many of the ills that flesh is heir to, happening to a man 50 years or so ago, had to be borne in pain and suffering, which now are quickly relieved or entirely cured by suitable appliances invented by men who have made a specialty of such things. One of the most common, perhaps, of the afflictions with which mankind is visited is rupture. This, by medical men called hernia, is the protrusion of some portion of the bowels, or of the viscera usually contained in the abdomen, through any part of the walls of that cavity. Unless the skin is wounded from without, the rupture remains covered by it, and by certain tissues which lie beneath it at the points where the accident usually occurs, these points being at those portions of the walls which are naturally thinner and weaker than others, or at which there are openings, naturally, for the passage of blood vessels. Many forms of trusses have been devised to cure the complaint, and a good deal of ingenuity has been displayed. It has been found, however, exceedingly difficult to construct one which is self-adjusting, elastic and constant in its operation, which would not at the same time annoy the wearers. The engravings on this page show a form in successful use, invented and patented by Prof. A. A. McLean, of this city, and called the I. X. L. Elastic Truss.

The principal feature of the invention is the combination and construction of the peculiar devices for supporting the adjustable pad, and for varying the pressure of the same on the parts to be supported. The pad is recessed to receive a screw coupling plate, and also a still deeper recess in which a coiled spring rests.

The plate is held to its seat around the upper recess of the pad by screws. Fig. 1 of the engravings is a view of the truss pad and supporting strap. Fig. 2 is a side elevation of the pad and the devices for connecting it with the belt, and Fig. 3 a view, partly in section, of the same parts disconnected.

To the end of the leather strap is connected the ball and socket, the end of the strap being held between two plates of metal, a screw going through all and holding the ball rigidly. The socket receives the ball previous to its being fixed by the screw. On the coiled spring is placed a leather packing, upon which the ball works, and prevents any friction or harshness by metal coming in contact with metal.

By this construction it will be seen that the pad will easily move to any point of a circle, and readily adjust itself to any surface or action of the body, and with the least possible pain or inconvenience to the sufferer. In order to obtain a greater or less pressure of the pad on the ruptured parts, the screw coupling in which the ball works is adjustable so as to relieve or increase the pressure of the ball on the coiled spring and pad. Once fixed with the required pressure, the implement is perfectly self-adjusting, and, while keeping a constant pressure, is at the same time elastic. In fact, so constant and regular is the pressure that it is claimed to be not a mere support, but a radical cure for the complaint for which it is intended. Prof. A. A. McLean, the inventor of this I. X. L. Truss, has in his possession the written indorsement of very many surgeons and physicians as to the utility of his invention. He has also several gold medals which have been awarded to the device. It is worn by a great many persons, and in the four years it has been in use is claimed to have made many hundreds of cures.

BROTHER BEN LEET, of Unity, No. 27, is located at Modesto as agent for the genuine Singer machine. He is a live, active business man, and has a large run of business. He is one of those genial, courteous men, a zealous Workman, and had the honor of being Marshal for the Workmen at their parade on May Day. The WATCHMAN is under obligations to him for favors extended.

THE necessity of practicing economy is keenly felt by many at this time, and it is fortunate that there are places where one can buy a good article at a low price. The California Furniture Manufacturing Company, 226 Bush street, are selling bedroom sets from twenty-four dollars upwards, and other furniture at equally low prices. Their goods are first-class.

A 70th Birthday Reception.

Seventieth anniversaries are rare things in human existence, and especially so where they are celebrated with all the appropriately joyous surroundings and good causes for thankfulness that marked the recent birthday party of Warren B. Ewer, senior partner of this publishing firm. We herewith reproduce the following account of it taken from the Call:

There was a very pleasant gathering on Tuesday evening, April 22d, at the residence of Mr. Warren B. Ewer, of the publishing firm of Dewey & Co., the occasion being the seventieth birthday anniversary of that gentleman, when about 125 of his friends called to present their congratulations. The grounds about the residence are quite spacious, and were illuminated by a large lawn lantern, supplemented by numerous Japanese lanterns, suitably arranged.

The interior of the house was very handsomely decorated with an abundance of flowers tastefully distributed.

The rear one of the large drawing-rooms was found to be closed when the company arrived; but this was soon explained, for the doors were thrown open and a parlor comedy was performed for the amusement of the guests by several talented amateurs.

On the conclusion of the performance Mr. J. S. Bacon, who was a member of the Board of Education during the same time that Mr. Ewer was, came forward and made some very interesting congratulatory remarks. He spoke of Mr. Ewer's early experience in crossing the plains in 1849, and of his having started the first newspaper in the City of Nevada in 1851. He also referred to his long-continued journalistic experience in California and of the elevating character of the publications with which he had been identified. He was also very properly congratulated on the habits of life and the constitution which had permitted him to reach "three score and ten" with his physical and mental faculties unimpaired and with a vigor and health which bids fair to continue for many years.

Mr. Ewer replied feelingly to these congratulations. Remarks were also made by Rev. Dr. Sawtelle and Dr. Charles D. Cleveland. An appropriate poem was presented by Mr. A. T. Dewey. Dr. J. W. Blake then came forward and on behalf of Ivy Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, presented Mr. Ewer with a very handsome gold-headed cane. Numerous other presents were made by the gentleman's friends. A feature to be noted was the number of floral offerings, among which were some very large and fine designs. Numerous tokens from absent friends were also received.

During the evening several ladies contributed their share of the entertainment by well-executed vocal music. Among these was the accomplished wife of Mr. Ewer, who is a well-known amateur. Mrs. C. Spilvalo, Miss Aggie Childs and Miss Ella Lark also gave well-rendered selections. A fine supper was served during the evening and later dancing was indulged in by many, the floors having been canvassed for this purpose.

Among those invited were the following-named: Judge and Mrs. E. D. Sawyer, Judge and Mrs. C. H. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Kellogg and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stubbs, Mr. and Mrs. C. Spilvalo, Miss Ella Goodale, Mrs. Lindsey, Miss Ella Cornell, Dr. F. C. Cook, Dr. and Mrs. H. A. Sawtelle, Rev. and Mrs. N. S. Rowell, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. CONCERNING METEORS.—In the course of a series of instructive lectures on astronomy, recently delivered in New York by Prof. C. A. Young, of Princeton, that gentleman spoke of meteoric bodies as follows: Meteoric particles are striking the earth at all times. Some astronomers estimate that as many as 10,000,000 particles strike the earth each day, while the lowest estimate puts the number at 7,500,000 per day. Many more of these particles strike the earth in the morning than at night, and frequently observing persons in their morning walks can plainly see evidences of the meteoric showers. These meteoric particles seem to be circulating in space, and the earth as it moves in its orbit, strikes against them. Some of the meteoric showers are very copious and very bright. One writer has likened a meteoric shower that he saw to a snow storm, the flakes being of fire instead of congealed vapor. The majority of the meteors that strike the earth are stone, and not iron, as is commonly supposed. Some, however, are of pure iron. Out of the 500 or 600 meteoric stones that have been found on the earth and preserved, not more than ten were iron. Astronomical observers have detected, by means of the spectroscopic, sodium, magnesium and sometimes iron in these bright shooting stars. One consequent of this constant falling of meteoric particles, is that the earth is growing larger; but the lecturer said that there was no immediate danger of any radical change taking place in the surface of this sphere, for at the present rate of meteoric fall, it would take 500,000,000 years for the earth to gain one inch of surface. Meteors are known to come in periodical showers, probably the most remarkable being the shower that occurs about the 11th or 12th of November. It appears that meteors follow in the track of comets. They are related to comets in some way or another, but exactly how the lecturer was not prepared to say. Some scientists thought that the meteors were the debris or cast-off particles of comets, while others thought that perhaps the comets were simply aggregations of meteoric particles, and the falling stars were the particles that did not get into the aggregations. It is certain, at any rate, that flocks of meteors follow the various comets at a few millions of miles behind.

"WHAT made the mule kick you?" they asked of the gentleman who had been sent through a roof of a barn. And he answered: "Do you think I was fool enough to go back and ask him?"

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS OF Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell streets, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER'S HEADQUARTERS. Office, No. 234 Post Street, San Francisco, Cal. JAMES SIMPSON, M. D.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN should be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always inclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

A NEW Degree of Honor Lodge is in process of formation at Lemoore.

OUR gain for April, over and above all losses of whatever kind, was nearly 150. We ought to do as well every month in the year.

RECORDERS are again reminded that suspensions for non-payment of assessments come by force of the law and not by action of a Lodge or any officer thereof; and they occur on the day after the 28th, and at no other time. Reports should be made accordingly. Of course reference is here made to suspension of certificates, and not suspension from the Order for six month's delinquency.

THE proceedings of the last Grand Lodge session have been sent out to all the Lodges of this jurisdiction—two copies to each. These should be kept on file in the Lodge. A copy has also been sent to each Representative and Deputy. In the appendix will be found all the amendatory legislation done at the session arranged in a form convenient for ready reference. This should be read in open Lodge, so that all may be posted in the changes made in the laws. If by any chance the proceedings fail to be received we will gladly send more to supply the deficiency.

THE PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, of San Francisco, will fill all unexpired contracts of the late Lodge Visitor, of this city. Several Workmen here are talking of making up a purse and starting another paper in the interest of the Order. If they don't support the paper any better than they did the Lodge Visitor, it won't take long for it to die.—Portland Standard.

THE Grand Master Workman has appointed T. N. Mount of Napa, District Deputy Grand Master, vice Wm. West resigned.

DR. SIMPSON has been reappointed Grand Medical Examiner.

Cathedral Rocks.

Our engraving gives a view of a majestic piece of natural rock work, the Cathedral Rocks in the far-famed Garden of the Gods, near the city of Manitou, Colorado, a resort of great prominence, and sometimes called which may be mentioned Williams' Canyon, Ute Pass, Pike's Peak, the Cave of the Winds, Cheyenne Canyons, Austin's Glen, Red Canyon and Rainbow Falls, while only a half-hour's ride from the village is the Garden of the Gods, containing numerous other wonders besides those here illustrated.

the Saratoga of the West. These rocks rising abruptly as they do are calculated to inspire a beholder with awe, at their gigantic size and wonderful formation. There are numerous other objects of scenic interest near Manitou, all of which, like the present one, are near the line of the railroad, among

THE new Finance Committee of the Grand Lodge were initiated into their work on Wednesday the 14th inst., and found the Grand Recorder's and Grand Receiver's books in perfect order, and speak well of the business-like manner in which the accounts are kept.

Our Mission.

The A. O. U. W. was not organized for the rich, but for the poor, and yet we have many millionaires who are members, and many who are comparatively poor that are not members, but ought to be. Thousands who are well-to-do while life and health is with them can get along comfortably, suffering for nothing of the real necessities of life, but these failing, they are in destitution. This class cannot afford to be outside such an organization as ours. Particularly for such the A. O. U. W. was brought into being. We do not object to wealthy members, but they do not need the aid of benevolent Orders. For them alone it would be hardly worth while to keep up the Order. But the masses are not wealthy. They consume about as rapidly as they accumulate, and yet enough can be easily spared to pay the cost of being and remaining a Workman in good standing. It is only a matter of a few cents per day—the price of a car ticket or a cigar, or a glass of beer—and the result is protection for the household when the sustaining arm shall wither and fall. But this is not all. The A. O. U. W. is a fraternal organization. It not only protects but it inculcates love to man, thus fulfilling the greatest of all commandments. No one can be a true Workman and not be the better for it. His good impulses are strengthened and his baser ones depressed. To the mass of men it is far more pleasant to do good acts than evil ones, and such pleasure is much heightened by indulgence. The laughing rill swells into a grand and majestic river of delight.

The A. O. U. W. Hall Association.

As was seen by the prospectus published in the last issue of the WATCHMAN, the members of this Association are actively at work, and the building of a new hall for the Order in this city is now an assured fact. The lot selected is on O'Farrell street, north side, between Mason and Taylor, size 55x137.6 feet; $25,500 is the price agreed upon, and $1,000 earnest money has been paid; $75,000 has been fixed as the entire cost of the hall, etc., including lot, and as every Lodge in the city, and hundreds of individual members own the stock, which is in 10,000 shares of $10 each, there is but little doubt but that the property will be a valuable one. At least 20 Lodges of this Order alone will occupy it. Besides halls for subordinates, there will be officers for the Grand Lodge, and a public hall for lectures, entertainments, etc. A board of 26 Directors chosen from all of the Lodges, including the four D. of H. Lodges, will manage its affairs. At the first offer, over one-third of the stock was subscribed for. By resolution, stock will only be sold to members of the Order. At a recent meeting it was voted to call in 25 per cent of the stock, which is now being collected.

ONE assessment for June.

Del Monte and Its Environs.

We recently had the pleasure of a trip to Monterey, and a brief sojourn among its natural and added charms and beauties. The run by rail from San Francisco through the delightful rural scenes of San Mateo county is full of delights to the sight-seeker. When one looks upon the green hills with their crowns of stalwart redwoods, upon the plains covered with vernal verdure and dotted with spreading oaks, there is no room for wonder that many of the rich residents of the great city have here located their country seats, and gratified their taste for the beautiful, by expanses of lawns and planting of ornamental trees. Beyond the suburban district there lies the rich fruit region around San Jose, and farther still the famous dairy country around Gilroy, with its rich pastures and thrifty herds. But the Monterey trains are swift, and one soon glides into the canyon by which the Pajaro river speeds to the ocean. In this canyon there are beauties at every curve of the road, tall hills and low-lying meadows, steadfast rocks and flowing waters—variety which cannot fail to charm. Through the Pajaro valley with its wide grain fields and orchards beyond, one comes at length to the vicinity of the coast, and thence along the dunes, carpeted at this season of the year with a profusion of flowers. At dusk the train rolls into the grand park, in which stands the Hotel Del Monte, which is the center of the grand lobby or office, rises the grand stair-case, which, without being massive, is a substantial and unique specimen of mechanical skill.

The ground floor, to the right of the grand lobby, or office, is laid out in suites of rooms. Quite a number of the choicest apartments are located here, and the windows of all these suites open out upon beautiful lawn gardens. The second story contains forty-eight suites, or about one-hundred rooms, and a corridor, or promenade, similar to that on the lower floor. On the top story there are thirteen suites and twenty-nine single rooms, making sixty-five apartments in all. There are three towers on the original building, one in the center and one on each end. That in the center is twenty five by thirty feet, and eighty feet in height. It contains ten rooms. The new addition contains sixty suites of rooms. This part of the house has been constructed with double doors, closets and bath rooms, etc., between each two apartments, thus making it possible to make a suite of any number of rooms at a moment's notice. The establishment throughout is furnished in the most luxurious manner. The floors are covered with body Brussels carpets of varied and exquisite patterns, while the furniture, and enchanting as is the enjoyment of its many comforts, we used most of the hours we could devote to the place to the pleasures of the grounds and the charming natural scenery in which the neighborhood is so rich. We soon found Mr. Ulrich, the landscape gardener, under whose eye and hand the spacious park is rapidly putting on new verdure, and being adorned with growths from almost every clime. The beds around the hotel show beautiful ribbon work, besides exquisite taste in the arrangement of bedding plants. The multitude of pillars are entwined by a multitude of vines, while around all the strips of well-kept lawns extend in all directions. Across the main drive-way which encircles the hotel, there are expanses of beds and serpentine walks over which the plant lover can stroll for hours and still find plenty to admire. Special features are the "Arizona garden," which contains hundreds of cacti and other desert plants brought from the Colorado desert and from Mexico, by Mr. Ulrich; and in another place is a "puzzle garden," made after a famous English model, in which the Monterey cypress is made to line the mazes of the labyrinth. Mr. Ulrich had a gang of about fifty men at work putting in rye and orchard grass lawns while we were there, and the visitor this summer will see stretches of green which will enrapture his vision.

Another outside enterprise of much interest is the fish hatching under the charge of Mr.

ning. Many tasteful new cottages are being erected and the area of tent dwellings is increasing. The large, new dining hall will be this year under the direction of Mr. Schonewald, and it will be managed on the order plan, so that a visitor can make his living expenses what he chooses. On some former years there has been dissatisfaction with the fare, but now excellence is assured for the future. We found Mr. Johnson, the superintendent, busily engaged and happy in the anticipation of the hosts of pleasant people who will come to his "retreat" this summer. The Grove is located right on the edge of the sounding sea, in which visitors can plunge at will, or content themselves with the inhalation of its reviving vapors.

We must acknowledge the receipt of much pleasure from our trip to Del Monte and its environs. It is a credit to the State. This winter hundreds of eastern summer-seekers have tarried at a time at Del Monte and have returned praising our State, its natural beauties and its comforts for the visitor. In the summer the resort will give our own people the delights of the equable coast climate when they fly from the bustle of the metropolis or the heat of the interior valleys. It is a region full of charms and points of interest, and all eyes should rest upon it.

Notice of Del Monte and its surroundings

VIEW SHOWING WEST AND SOUTH FRONTAGE AND CLUB-HOUSE, FROM PHOTOGRAPHS TAKEN IN DECEMBER, 1883.

Monte. There are many fine rides by rail in California, and from San Francisco to Monterey by the Southern Pacific is one of the most varied and delightful of them.

The magnificent hotel which is, in part, well shown by the engraving on this page, rises amidst the natural trees of the park and impresses the stranger deeply as he approaches it with its vastness and varied outlines. Once inside the doors, the idea of extent gives way at once for an impression of welcome and comfort. When we were ushered into the large apartment which serves for an office, with its blazing log fires and cosy groups of ladies and gentlemen chatting together in the bright light and genial warmth, we thought we had reached the ideal hotel. The hotel "office" generally is a dreary place, with its group of lounging men and its adjacent bar and billiard rooms, wash-room and barber shop. Del Monte is different. There is no sign of any of these accompaniments, but its office has the air of the drawing room. The taste, comfort and elegance which one thus finds at the entrance grows upon him as he explores the interior.

To the left of the grand lobby lies a cosy reading and writing room, twenty-four by twenty-six feet, while beyond this, with an entrance from the spacious hall-way, is a ladies' billiard room, twenty-five by sixty-two feet, one of the largest and most luxuriously appointed apartments of the kind in the United States. On the same floor there is a ladies' parlor, thirty-two by forty-two feet, and beyond this, partly in the rear, and approached by a hall-way and a covered veranda, lies a fine ball-room, thirty-six by seventy-two feet. A twelve-foot wide corridor extends the whole length of the building, and serves as a promenade. At the intersection of each of the wings a stair case leads from this corridor upstairs, and from its center, which is also the center of the grand lobby or office, rises the grand stair-case, which, without being massive, is a substantial and unique specimen of mechanical skill.

The dining room of the Del Monte is located in the rear of the grand stair-case. It is a commodious and exceedingly pleasant apartment, forty-five by seventy feet in dimensions, and capable of seating three hundred guests. The kitchen, pantries, etc., are in the rear of the dining room, and they are large, airy and clean, and well suited to the purposes for which they were designed, and are used and fitted up with every necessary convenience and appliance. The table is kept bountifully supplied with every delicacy the market affords, cooked in the most appetizing manner, and served in perfect style.

The hotel, as shown in the engraving, is 380 feet in length, and 115 feet in width, aside from the extension which is seen on the left. It is divided into two full stories—a high, attic story and a basement. In all it contains 240 rooms, and can easily accommodate 500 guests. Throughout the house there is not a room which is not well ventilated and reached by the sun. The windows of the upper stories all present magnificent views, those on the top being in this respect, of course, the best. But while some command a more advantageous range of vision than others, none are without a pleasing prospect—a little bit of the landscape garden, a general view of the park grounds, or a sweeping view of the whole surroundings—across the foliage-laden tree tops, over the sleepy old capital, on and on until the dancing waters of the bay and the heavens above seem to come together in a blue mist.

But delightful as is the interior of the house

Woodbury the well-known pisciculturist. The owners of the hotel, purchased, at great expense, certain water rights on the Carmel River, twenty-six miles away. There they built a dam, and from it they have laid eight miles of eighteen inch piping, and eighteen miles of sixteen inch piping, thus bringing the water right into the hotel park. The surplus flow is conducted into a good sized lake and will support millions of trout which are now being grown from the egg by Mr. Woodbury. His establishment is a center of attraction.

Beyond the lake and on the beach was the splendid bathing establishment of Del Monte. Here the visitor can take almost every kind of a salt water bath. The building in which the large plunge bath is situated is decorated with rare house plants, ferns, palms etc., and presents a beautiful appearance. The many departments of the grand establishment known as Del Monte are gathered under the general management of Mr. Schonewald, formerly of the Lick House in this city, and every detail shows his wonderful executive skill and perfect devotion to the work. We used the greater part of a day with a drive over the 18 miles of roadway built by the owners of the property. On this drive one skirts the ocean shore, through Pacific Grove, thence to the famous Cypress Point and thence inland among the trees, circling around and crossing the ridge until the Del Monte part is again reached. It is a delightful drive and with the excellent horses to be obtained cannot fail to give great pleasure to the visitor.

At Pacific Grove we found everything in preparation for the "season" which is just begin-would not be complete without allusion to the charming bay upon whose shores all these interesting enterprises have arisen. A devout correspondent of the Philadelphia Friend wrote the following apostrophe: "Standing on the margin of this fine bay, and looking out over its blue waters, a feeling indescribably grand and delightful seems to steal over the senses—there we see a long sweep of shore-line of glistening sands, surf-washed with snowy foam that beats ceaselessly against its whitened margin—here, at our feet, break the resistless surges on rock and cavern; then, again, we stand gazing on the majestic waves of the mighty Pacific as they roll in beside us, each succeeding wave seeming more grand and awful; dashing high, with quickened and tremendous force, a cloud of seething foam bursts on the frowning rocks. Contemplating this sublime and overpowering scene, how utterly helpless and insignificant man appears. The Creator is exalted, and we are led to exclaim, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Here, too, are scenes of quiet beauty. The sun gilds the surface of the water and warms and vivifies with many tints the sands of the sea shore; the fisherman's boat moves noiselessly over the bay, giving it new life; the sea birds wheel past in long curving lines; and porpoises and sea lions are seen disporting themselves; landward ranges of rugged mountains purpled by the evening sunlight fade away in the dim, shadowy distance, the whole forming a picture somewhat similar, but grander and more expressive than the famous Bay of Naples, without the terrors of Vesuvius. The sun, imparting its setting glory to all, sinks below the water line, and as the evening shadows lengthen into the darkness of night, I bid farewell to a scene not easily forgotten, and that has so wonderfully and charmingly embraced, the wild, the romantic, and the beautiful."

The Sierras and the Himalayas.

[A Comparison Between the Forests of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and Those of the Himalaya. Translated from the German of R. Von Schlagintweit by Professor Granville F. Foster, for the Reno Gazette.]

Among the many beauties of California, the forests, that magnificent ornament of the far-stretching and mighty Sierra Nevada, occupies one of the most prominent positions. Although the transient view of the same charms the tourist as he is whirled in rapid flight over the Pacific railroad, yet it is well nigh impossible for him to have even a suspicion much less any correct idea of the sublime and charming wonders of nature which would unfold themselves at every step before his astonished and delighted gaze in inexhaustible profusion, should he happen to leave the train sometime during the summer months at any one of the stations which lie high up in the mountains, and thus to seize upon one of the many opportunities which here so often present themselves to learn by closer view the interior of the country.

More than once in such excursions would the forests of California forcibly recall to mind those in that loftiest range of mountains, the Himalayas (which I have also visited) and at such times would I be led to make the comparison between them which I here append for the benefit of the reader.

We find in the Sierra Nevada that the natural which surround it jealously, which rob it of its choicest juices, which deprive it of the space necessary to its complete development. In this

Complete Development in the Forests of California

Can the trees be seen, the eyes resting, well pleased and delighted, on the dark green of the leaves and indeed upon the harmonious blending of colors in all parts of the trees themselves, while the glory and beauty of these become enhanced by a carpet beneath, most gorgeously woven out of numberless rich-blooming flowers, magnificent both as to form and color, and out of a large variety of grasses, most delicate and beautiful both as to shape and hue—a carpet with which the forest floor in this region is almost always adorned. But in a tropical forest each plant-form continually strives to supplant and to kill out every other form. No tree there can attain to its greatest size or reach its complete development, since between the numberless twigs and branches of the tree itself, there twist and wind in manifold forms, in thousands of varieties, twining plants, ferns as tall as a man, besides which there is a prodigious growth of parasitic plants. The tropical forest is overpowered, burdened by the very superabundance and luxuriance of its own plant-forms. Fruitless indeed will be any endeavor on our part to discover in tropical forests the least trace of regularity. There rules there, on the contrary, a chaos, an irregular mass, a perfect confusion of trees, shrubs, grasses, climbing, and parasitic plants of every kind and variety. There, too, will the eye soon tire, not the less because of the glaring, obtrusive colors which that which collects in the lower or deeper-lying places, in ponds, or more truthfully in sloughs or puddles, does not refresh when ingested. It is warm, instead of allaying, it increases thirst and when used in large quantities, excites a general malaise, which often instead of soon passing away, leads to high and violent fevers, or to some other of the dangerous diseases. It can only be used without detriment to health when boiled, or after it has undergone the tedious process of filtration. As we wander through the pathless jungles, a gloomy sadness seizes us when we reflect what sovereignty man possesses, even when his knowledge and capacity for labor have been tested to the utmost over this particular world, so at enmity with him.

But from every point of view, what a different picture do the forests of the Sierra Nevada present! What a striking but charming contrast. Here blows a clear, pure, refreshing, animating and strengthening wind; now here, now there, bubbles up from the earth beneath, springs of the most precious of waters—clear and pure as crystal; now here, now there, pours over the rocks a roaring torrent. In the Sierra Nevada and still more in the Himalaya (which, from their great height, we do not reckon as tropical in their flora) it frequently happens that different circumstances combine to lighten into still greater degree the natural beauty of the forest. The climate, as in the Sierra Nevada, is simply glorious; no cloud in summer ever obscures the deep blue vault of heaven, and the temperature of the air is neither too hot nor too cold. Now, between trees, flowers and the most luxuriant green, we enter some narrow valley. Traveling along this valley, we

Sierra Nevadas.

[By ELIZA A. PITTSINGER.]

Imperial Mountains, beauteous and fair,
That seem bedecked in braids of shining hair,
As each bold tree now glitters in the haze
And tranquil glamor of the golden days,
Whose glories and whose prophecies sublime
Sing songs imblended with the lays of time.

Robed in the regal splendors of a queen
Art thou, Sierra, glowing in the sheen
Of clouds above thee, that like banners glide,
Wave, undulate and tremble on the tide,
Dip their soft colors, and their hues unfold
In baths of amber, seas of shining gold!

O, what so fair, so charming to the view
In this wide world, we wander through and through?
What now so lovely 'neath the smiling stars,
The gorgeous Hesper or the fiery Mars,
As these enchanting mountain peaks that stand
A crown and glory of the Golden Land?

O, would that themes were music, words were fire,
And dreams were real things that do inspire
The soul with lasting bliss! that thoughts were strains,
Whose lightning wings above the misty plains
Might sweetly kindle to immortal verse,
Whose glowing beams should clasp the universe!

O, would that all things dark were bright and fair,
Like thee, my own loved mountains, reigning
there;
A shadow, symbol and a sweet design
Of the soul's progress in its growth divine!
A type of all things lofty, grand and high,
Pointing with deathless fingers to the sky.

Alps of the West, pride of the Golden State,
Where all things seem to blend and culminate,
Most perfect and complete! as each tall pine
A wondrous charm and splendor doth enshrine,
Reminding one of some vast giant form,
A Titan struggling, wrestling with the storm!

Nor would I now forget one summer time
Whose memories with thy flowery coverts chime,
When like a pilgrim searching for sweet rest,
For some secluded Paradise in quest,
I made my way, sought out thy green defiles,
And found a refuge in thy shadowy wilds;
Nor cared if aught went well, went ill or wrong,
Cared less if all or any loved my song,
If praise or blame, adversity or fame
Had shed their incense then, 'twas all the same!

'Twas all the same, 'tis now the same to me
If worlds go wrong or doctors disagree;
Whether the wintry North or melting South,
Is chilled with frost, or parched with summer
drouth;
Whether beside Atlantic's surging tide,
Or where the bland Hesperian waters glide
Down verdant slopes with sunset hues aflame,
It matters not—'tis even still the same Where'er the days go by. Yet do I hold
Within this clime a something like the gold
That doth enrich the arteries and veins
Of mountain gorges, river beds and plains.

Weird and imperial chain, what hidden fate
Hath swung for thee its everlasting gate?
From what sublime upheaval of the past
Were these high towers and precipices cast,
These splendors carved, these wondrous beauties wrought,
These great conceptions so divinely fraught?
Was it by chance, or by some Master Hand?
O, answer me, ye mountains, fair and grand!

Thou hast, perchance, in ways unknown to me,
Once slept with all thy charms beneath the sea,
For cycles lying there—within the cell
Of secrets that no human tongue may tell,
Until at last, by some occult behest,
Forth wert thou hurled from thy long pent-up rest!
That terrace, slope, defile and granite rock
May be the fruits of some great earthquake shock!

Or from some seething, vast volcanic pyre
Thou hadst thy birth—that lava, smoke and fire,
In a huge cosmic and chaotic mass,
Forth to artistic loveliness did pass—
That order, grace and systematic charm,
Like some fair thing of life leapt into form;
And as the islands spring from distant seas,
Thou didst evolve in mighty peaks and trees.

The more I ponder all the more I seem
To be enwrapped in some bewitching dream;
No answer to my query cometh back
Along the strata's line, the mystic track—
Not one fair signal that may bear the mark
Of that which time hath hid, wrapt in the dark
Of eras long gone by; ages that give
No sign or token that they once did live.

Whence, whither, why or whereabout thou came
Whether from earthquake or volcanic flame,
We may not know, for finite sense is blind
To that which lies so wondrously enshrined
Within the infinite—beyond the veil,
The mystic, deep and dark imperious veil,
That bounds material substance, spans the sight,
Shuts out from eyes that cannot bear the light,
The secrets of creation; whose grand laws
Are culminations of the First Great Cause!
San Francisco, May, 1884.

SCENE IN THE HIGH SIERRAS OF CALIFORNIA.

glory of the forest is greatly heightened in the summer season by an over-arching sky never for once obscured by clouds—a sky which in purity, brilliancy and splendor, equals that of tropical regions, without ever consuming us in its glowing fervor, as does the latter. In the Himalayas, and in the Sierras, are trees which seem to possess a correct presentiment and thus fearful lest otherwise they might have been seized by the powerful and equally destroying as well as creating hand of man, and thus made to breathe out their tender lives beneath the strokes of the woodman's axe, are found growing on precipices so steep and so inaccessible, that possibly the feet of man may never be able to tread thereon. In both regions,

A Fragrant, Balsamic Air,

which we breathe with indescribable delight, whistles gently at all hours during the daytime in these magnificent forests, through which there constantly passes a mysterious whispering and rustling. Especially in summer, when in California the days are almost continually cloudless, are the evenings even in those forests, which reach an altitude of 6,000 feet, incomparably beautiful, since, at that time of the year, there is a rich and varied vegetation, and in the evenings rather than during the daytime, the very air seems loaded with the perfume of myriads of odoriferous shrubs and flowers.

The various kinds of coniferous trees, which, spreading over vast areas in magnificent forests, adorn the crests and declivities of the Sierra Nevada, form equally well a "primeval forest" as do the thickest jungles and far-stretching forests of India at the base of the Himalayas, or those of Southern and tropical America. But how vastly different is such a forest in California or in the higher Himalayas, from a tropical one! In the forest region of California each tree grows to its full perfection, since there is no profuse growth of climbing plants, no powerful ferns, no troublesome parasite plants the leaves present on all sides than in consequence of their myriad forms and their total lack of regularity. It is impossible to avoid the sad conviction which obtrudes itself forcibly on the mind that here the vegetable kingdom develops its plant-forms in such a manner that the noble and perfect ones are oppressed and stifled, while on the contrary, in opposition to all the laws of harmony and beauty, the common and lower forms are favored and assisted. It is not there the survival of the fittest, but of the hardiest and strongest which obtains there.

Just in the same ratio as we in California search with the most pleasant of anticipations for every place in which the giant trees lift up to heaven with joy their lofty forms, so do we avoid on the contrary just as much as possible any lengthened delay in tropical forests, not because of any apprehension of any unpleasant meeting with the fierce and ravenous beasts that make their habitat therein, but simply from the natural disinclination to expose ourselves to influences highly pernicious—in the prejudicial to health—influences which here bear full and complete sway over us, against which we cannot oppose anything with any hope of success, our knowledge here completely failing, leaving us well-nigh powerless and defenseless.

Beauties of the Sierra.

The atmosphere of tropical forests is of itself full of vapors, is humid, oppressive, sultry and is further rendered pestilential by miasmatic vapors, exhaled from enormous masses of decaying vegetation. The ground is constantly moist, oftentimes covered inches thick with plants, leaves, broken branches, all lying prostrate in the mass and seething with corruption. Beneath these fallen materials, sometimes quite covered with them, and often thus hidden from the eye, frequently steal along muddy and slimy streams, or occasionally water in the form of isolated brooks. The water of these streams, as well as come at length, suddenly and unexpectedly, to a bend in the same, passing which, and behold! before us stands one of those most sublime of mountain peaks (of which there are so many both in the Sierra Nevada and Himalaya) rising thousands of feet, and clothed with the most dazzling, blinding white snow, creating one of the most brilliant and beautiful contrasts, between the pure, dazzling white, on one hand, and the delicate tints of green which surround us on all sides in the valley. Our guides, the Hindoos, prostrate themselves to the earth, and we hear them devoutly murmur their low-spoken prayers to the supposed deity that resides on the mountain summit. Even we are greatly affected, and stand captivated and charmed in speechless admiration. The appearance is so sudden, so unexpected, and at the same time so imposing, that it produces in us a deep, overpowering effect, making an impression on our minds which nothing is able to efface. I can to-day vividly recall many such grandly beautiful scenes in nature, many of which I saw years since in the wide extended plain of the Ganges, as I turned my eyes in the direction of the mountains. It is just such scenes as these, which, making the Himalayas so beautiful, lend a peculiar, and to a stranger, a never-to-be looked-for charm to the landscape, which, in itself alone, is ever a sufficient compensation for all the trouble and fatigue which we are obliged to undergo ere it is possible for us to procure for our enjoyment so rich a pleasure; but as prodigally as the Himalayas have been endowed by nature with beauties, inexhaustible in quantity and kind, yet there is wanting there one of the grandest ornaments of the California forests, namely, those giant trees which appear here and there in a few places in the not so lofty, but not less beautiful, Sierra Nevada, known in California as the "big trees" the old, venerable sequoias, at one time known in England as the Wellingtonia gigantea, and in America as the Washingtonia gigantea.

"Old Line" vs. Fraternal and Co-operative Insurance.

As a rule, we have deemed it best to pass by with little or no attention the attacks made upon the insurance system of our fraternal Orders, from the idea that their daily workings certified to their strength. We have been informed though, that the continued dinning of some of the "old line" agents, especially in this city, is weakening the faith of some of our less stalwart brothers, and lest our silence should be construed as admitting the conclusions of their so-called arguments, we will devote some space to refuting said assertions.

It is pleasant to note that several of the best of our American companies have never engaged in this senseless warfare on fraternal societies, and they are also doing a good business. There are still, however, a few individuals who, with distorted statistics, keep up their attacks on the various Orders and try to show that the end will come in about ten years.

Among these is a monthly journal of this city called the Coast Review, devoted to all kinds of insurance companies, except fraternal and co-operative ones. With preconceived notions, and a few figures selected and distorted to serve its purpose, it makes an onslaught, especially on the A. O. U. W., in its current issue. It picks out the statistics of the yellow fever districts of the south for the past few years, tries to make them apply to the whole country, including this coast, and deduces therefrom the conclusion that our assessments are increasing alarmingly each year; that at this rate they will soon reach 30 per year, and then rejoices at the prospect of a grand smash-up. A few facts, however, may serve to cool the vivid imagination of this ardent writer. Take the number of assessments for California each year since we became a separate jurisdiction. They run as follows: For '79, 14; for '80, 16; for '81, 14; for '82, 19; for '83, 17; for this half of '84, including June, there are 9, which is one less than for the same half of last year. Experience so far has proved that the heaviest losses occur in the first half of the year, judging from which we are liable to have fewer assessments this year than last, certainly hardly any more. In the 15 years of its existence, the A. O. U. W. has positively refused to oblige these croakers by dying as they prophesied, and is still a very healthy "invalid."

In another paragraph this journal says: "Of 182 deaths in the California branch of the A. O. U. W., 33 were from consumption, and a large percentage of these consumptives died soon after their admission to the Order. Persons predisposed to this malady who cannot get insured in regular life companies seem to incur little or no difficulty in securing admission to the ranks of the A. O. U. W. This fact partly accounts for the increasing death rate of that society." This whole assertion is misleading. In the first place, while he does not expressly say so, he leaves one to infer that this is last year's death rate. There were but 133 deaths in this jurisdiction last year—considerably less than one per cent of our membership—or to be more explicit, less than 8% on the 1,000. To get his 33 "consumptives" the writer has admitted that he rung in all pulmonary diseases—pneumonia, bronchitis, phthisis, etc.—and counted them under the head of consumption. As for the A. O. U. W. accepting material that the "old-liners" reject, we know from personal observation of a case that occurred in just the opposite way a few weeks since in this city, and are prepared to give the proofs when called on.

As for short duration of life in the Order, let us take the June assessment of this year for California as a sample, and we find that the average length of time that those deceased had belonged—in our duration of six years as a separate jurisdiction—is about 4½ years. A journal that will so distort facts to manufacture arguments, acknowledges that it has formidable rivals and a poor cause of its own to defend. Before dropping our contemporary we would like to inquire what beneficial Order its manager is a member of. We do so for the reason that we suppose he is not radically different from the general run of "old-line" insurance men, quite a number of whom we know to hold (with a beautiful disregard for consistency), insurance policies in the very Orders that their words condemn.

Those who argue that our societies will die a natural death in a few years, are either "surface arguers" themselves, or else rely on the gullibility of the general public to take the easiest view of things without taking the trouble to probe deeper. They triumphantly ask, "What are you going to do when your membership all get old and begin to die off fast?" and considering that an unanswerable argument, wait not for reply, but fling out their banners and shout "Victory!" In fact we don't believe that they want a reply. But they shall have it. Our membership as a whole will never get old, and consequently never die off much faster than at present from natural causes.

If the above question could be applied as a sensible one to the population of the entire world, following out its inferences, this globe would have been depopulated long ago. It assumes no growth whatever. Now anyone who has investigated such subjects knows that a society or insurance company which has reached the age of about 15 years, will then, if healthy, have reached the maximum of the average age of its membership. It will not then vary much, so long as the inexorable law of growth holds its sway. The average age of the membership in the Orders of Masons and Odd Fellows has remained about the same for many years. In the former Order also in the 25 years from 1855 to 1880, the ratio of deaths per 1,000 was never less than 9 nor more than 13. It reached its highest limit during the years of the civil war. The average for the 25 years was 11. If the average limit of life of all mankind remains about the same from year to year, why should that of a class of men especially selected for their physical qualifications do any worse? So long as the growth equals the waste, the Orders will continue to live and prosper—and a sufficient growth is always assured in our standard Orders by honorary service.

Here is where these Orders have one great advantage over the regular insurance companies. They have no high salaried officers to pay. Mr. Hyde, President of the Equitable New York Life Insurance Company, testified before a Legislative Investigating Committee that he received the wretched bagatelle of $7,500 a year as salary. To be sure, he admitted that he had a little allowance—a sort of reward of merit—of $50,000 more, and then in order to encourage him he was allowed to receive $20,000 in addition from another concern of which he was made "nominal" agent in order to secure the inestimable advantage of his great name; but he only got $77,500 altogether, and the thirty-nine other officers of this corporation were starving on salaries ranging all the way from the sum for which poor Hyde slaved, for two or three hours a day, down to $1,995 per annum. That is where the money goes. When we reflect that the four oldest insurance companies in America have paid a yearly average of $10.32½ per each $1,000 insured to pay their death losses since 1854, and yet continue to charge an average premium to all ages of $39.52, we can more readily appreciate the animus of the attacks on insurance Orders.

Again, our societies are attacked as having no reserve fund. They have a reserve fund, but it is in the pockets of their members, ready to be called out when necessary, and not where corrupt officials can manipulate it. During the last twenty years, sixty-five life insurance companies have been swept out of existence, taking with them $101,420,255, and leaving behind them 256,182 broken promises. It is needless to say that they all had reserve funds, and it is a significant fact that not one of them had its solvency impaired by death losses, but as the reports showed, by "extravagance, bad investments and speculation."

As for the youth of the insurance Orders, they are not so young as many think. The Ancient Order of Foresters, formed many years ago in England, is one of the largest Orders in the world, and has long had an insurance feature working successfully. The oldest fraternal beneficial society in the world is the Count de Winton Society, organized in 1168, and is still in existence. The next oldest is the Loyal Evanus Society, established in 1358. The Registrar of England reports eighty-nine friendly or beneficial societies in existence that were organized in the 17th century, and over 1,000 such societies that are over fifty years old. In England 10,755 friendly societies are reported, with 7,000,000 members. The Royal Liver Friendly Society, organized in 1850, reports 865,076 members. As the old world for many years has proved the value of these organizations, it has gone beyond any experiment and meets the patronage and co-operation of the people. Millions upon millions of dollars, and hundreds of thousands of claims are annually paid by these friendly societies.

The Work of the Hour.

The Supreme Lodge meets on the first Tuesday of June next in Toronto, Canada. It has some important work to do, and no doubt, as usual, a good deal (that would open a perfect Pandora's box of evils, if adopted), will be forced upon the attention of the body by the everlasting hobby-riders who afflict that as well as many other similar bodies. We expect to hear of the graded assessment abomination again. We should not feel reconciled if on reading the proceedings of the session there should be found missing the usual proposition to grade assessments. The illogical advocates of such a measure never were known to go below "surface indications." They jump at the conclusion that assessments ought to be graded according to age, but just how the grade should be, no soul can now tell. We doubt whether any soul can ever tell. If by a man's age we knew how long he would live and how long he would remain in the Order, then we could make a correct estimate of the hazard incurred by receiving him into membership, but without such knowledge we must in any case make him pay too much or too little. We do this on our present system, and it cannot be avoided. No man has yet lived out his expectancy of life in the Order, and if men died in accordance with the expectancy of life we should not yet have been called on to pay a single assessment, and the more than a million dollars paid to widows of our brothers in this jurisdiction alone, would still be in the pockets of our members unless paid out for something besides on assessment calls. Our plan of assessments is good enough as it is. It doesn't need any grading. We get as many young men pro rata as any other society, despite the allurements claimed for graded assessments. It is so simple that anyone can understand it. It recognizes the fact of fraternal obligations. The strong must help the weak. Those who live must pay to the beneficiaries of those who die. But no one can live long enough to pay into the organization what his own beneficiaries will receive, if he keeps his standing good, and therefore he cannot be cheated. The average of our assessments will probably never exceed 20 in a year. We should at that rate have to pay $20 a year for 100 years to have the aggregate payments amount to $2,000. Nobody is hurt by our plan of level assessments, and nobody is in danger. Hands off if you please, iconoclasts!

Then there is the matter of a reserve fund. We want nothing of such nonsense. In nine cases out of ten, a reserve fund is in fact a fund reserved for somebody to steal. So long as members pay their assessments there is no need of any such fund, and if they fail to pay, the organization will go to pieces despite a reserve fund, which in turn would go, the Lord only knows where, but we can pretty safely say that it would not go to pay death-losses in a dead society. Such a thing was never yet known to be done.

There is some talk of a new ritual. It will probably end in talk. We could have a new ritual that it would pay to adopt, but to produce such a one would be a labor of perhaps months by some one well qualified for the work. A good ritual cannot be framed by a committee. It must be substantially the work of one master hand. A committee could perhaps polish off and put on a few finishing touches, but the body of the work must be done by the master, and men capable for such work, as a rule, do not work for nothing. A prize of $500, or better, $1,000, would no doubt bring us a ritual of superior excellence; but a change should not be made for any other. The Ritual Committee might, however, do a little profitable work in the way of revising our burial services; providing a ceremony for dedicatory ceremonies; and another for the laying of corner-stones of public edifices. We need these things more than any other class of legislation. It would strengthen the bonds of fraternal union, and that is of more importance at the present time than all else that can be done.

Supreme Recorder's Monthly Statement.

The monthly statement of the Supreme Recorder shows that in the four funds of the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction—General, Relief, Beneficiary and Contributed Beneficiary—the Supreme Receiver had in his hands Apr. 1st, a balance of $9,524.11, and received up to May 1st, $77,860.55, making a total of $87,384.66. He paid out warrants for $76,298.31, leaving a balance of $11,086.35. The Supreme Recorder furnishes the following summary for the month of March, 1884:

Powers of a Grand Master Workman.

Before leaving for Toronto, Canada, Dr. M. W. Fish, Supreme Master Workman, called our attention to an article in the Michigan Herald, covering the grounds in a controversy involving the relations of Grand Master Workman and Grand Medical Examiner, and defining the rights of a G. M. W. to suspend officers of the Grand Lodge subordinate to himself. The S. M. W. thought it would be a good matter for the Supreme Lodge department of this paper as expressing in the main his views on the same subject. Following is the article:

The following peculiar and interesting case has been presented to us for an opinion as to the proper mode of redress:

It appears from the facts as presented, that in the formation of a Lodge the Grand Medical Examiner rejected four of the applicants for reasons that are, without question, good and sufficient, and also refused to commission one of four Medical Examiners for said Lodge on account of his inability or refusal to furnish proof that he was a graduate.

The Lodge together with the four rejected applicants then preferred charges against the Grand Medical Examiner, who resided in the town where the Lodge was located.

The Grand Master Workman sent the Grand Medical Examiner a copy of the charges, asked an explanation and notified him that a committee would be appointed to try the case, and that due notice thereof would be given him.

After this it appears that the G. M. W. changed his mind and without further explanation suspended the Grand Medical Examiner (under a clause in the Grand Lodge Constitution authorizing him "for cause to suspend an officer and appoint another in his stead, to act until the next annual meeting of the Grand Lodge") then appointed a successor, who it is asserted approved the applications of the four rejected applicants, and they now hold Beneficiary Certificates and are members of the Order.

The following questions are presented, to which we append replies:

1st. Did the G. M. W. have the constitutional right to suspend an officer of the G. L. upon these charges without first appointing a court to investigate said charges and hearing them report?

Yes, the constitutional right is vested in him by the Grand Lodge Constitution. It is perhaps unfortunate that no method of provisional appeal is provided for. In Michigan an appeal lies to the Committee on Jurisprudence, whose decision is final, until the next session of the G. L. It may be noted that the clause giving this power is copied from the section defining the duties of the Supreme Master Workman.

2d. Has the G. M. W. the right under Section 42, Laws General Application, to suspend an officer?

The section quoted has no bearing on the case. Sections 38 to 46 referring to charges and Offences, Form of Trial, etc. and Mode of Appeal all have a Lodge as a basis of action, whether it be a Subordinate, Grand or Supreme Lodge. In this case the Subordinate Lodge has no jurisdiction. It is a matter for the Grand Lodge. The Grand Lodge is not in session, consequently the Grand Master Workman, who is "to exercise the executive functions of the Grand Lodge when not in session" acts under the special power conferred in the Grand Lodge Constitution heretofore quoted. This provision is temporary "until the next annual meeting of the Grand Lodge."

3d. Having been suspended by the Grand Master Workman, whether rightfully or wrongfully does not an appeal lie to the Supreme Master Workmen under Section 45, Laws General Application?

No. The action of the Grand Master Workmen is not final, it is "until the next meeting of the Grand Lodge." It is only provisional. It is a matter that the Grand Lodge must act upon. But beyond this the general rule forbids. Appeals lie from the M. W. to the Lodge, from the Grand M. W. to the Grand Lodge, from the Supreme M. W. to the Supreme Lodge. See Section 654 Digest. "An appeal does not lie directly to the Supreme M. W. or Supreme Lodge from the decision of a Grand M. W. The appeal from the G. M. W. must first be taken to the Grand Lodge over which he presides, and from the decision of the latter an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Lodge or Supreme M. W." Decision 29, Sup. M. W. Frizzell, page 188, 8th annual session of Sup. Lodge.

4th. Would a Constitution of a G. L. giving the G. M. W. authority to remove an officer except as is provided for in Section 41 to 44, Laws of General Applications, be in conformity with Supreme Lodge Constitution?

Any authority vested in the G. M. W. that is contrary to the Laws of the Supreme Lodge would most certainly not be in conformity with the Supreme Lodge Constitution, but we have intimated that the sections referred to do not cover the temporary suspension of a Grand or Supreme Lodge officer which power is vested in the Grand and Supreme M. W. by a specific enactment.

Now as to the remedy. An appeal lies to the Grand Lodge from the action of the Grand M. W. and from the Grand Lodge to the Supreme M. W. if the Supreme Lodge is not in session and finally from the decision of the Supreme M. W. to the Supreme Lodge.

We can readily understand that a great injustice might be done an officer who has been arbitrarily removed, but this can be remedied by allowing a provisional appeal as Michigan does.

Again this case seems to perpetrate an injustice on the Order for the four rejected applicants are now members of the Order, and that, too, in face of a Grand Lodge decision that the action of the Grand Medical Examiner should be final. We can not understand how these men could have been admitted under any circumstances until after the lapse of six months, and the conclusion seems to be that the removal of the Grand Medical Examiner was not for the "Good of the Order."

We shall watch the outcome of this case with considerable interest, and we have faith that the Grand Lodge will right the wrong that appears to have been committed, not only against the officer referred to but the entire Order.

WE were favored recently with a pleasant call from Brother Moses Stinchfield, of Sycamore, District Deputy of District No. 2, of Colusa county. Brother Stinchfield was in the city as a delegate to the Grand Council, Independent Order of Chosen Friends. He will be remembered as one of the successful competitors in the "Fraternity" prize poem contest.

Nevada Grand Lodge.

The WATCHMAN goes to press too early to get reports by mail of the Grand Lodge in session at Salt Lake City, but will have a full report next issue. The following telegram, however, gives the election of officers and some other notes of interest:

SALT LAKE, May 21.—The first session of the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen for the district of Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Idaho and Montana, today elected the following officers: J. W. Kinsley, Grand Master Workman; William M. Bullard, of Montana, Grand Foreman; J. C. Harlow, of Nevada, Grand Overseer; D. Thorburn, of Utah, Grand Recorder; James Sullivan, of Montana, Grand Receiver; F. H. Jones, of Wyoming, Grand Guide; George L. Harding, of Utah, Grand Trustee; W. A. Mensch, of Idaho, Grand Watchman; Representatives to the Supreme Lodge, Past Grand Masters, J. W. Kinsley, E. N. Robinson, S. W. Chubbuck. The jurisdiction embraces 66 Lodges, having 2,200 members. Although organized four years, it was only made a separate beneficiary jurisdiction in August, 1883, and since then has paid 12 death losses, amounting to $24,000. All the Lodges were represented.

Past Grand Master Jordan on the Select Knights.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—As many of my brethren have lately written me regarding the Select Knights A. O. U. W., desiring to know my views and impressions of that organization, permit me to say through your columns that three years ago I was not a little opposed to its introduction among the Lodges of California. Since that time, however, my views have been greatly modified upon that subject from the result of personal observation in the Eastern States, where I have found this Uniform Rank to be a most efficient auxiliary to the Order. Illinois, Missouri and New York furnish notable instances of good work that this institution is doing for the A. O. U. W.

Seeing with me in this case is believing, and I have made up my mind that if the Select Knights can be the means of imparting enthusiasm to our brotherhood across the mountains, it may be of service to us in California, and since it has now become a factor of the A. O. U. W., through the recognition of the Supreme Lodge, it shall have my hearty commendation and support.

Yours fraternally in C., H. and P.,

WILLIAM H. JORDAN, P. G. M. W.

A Wedding and a Reunion.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Frisbie held a reunion at their residence at Anderson, Shasta county, upon April 20th, 21st and 22d, the occasion being the wedding of Miss Adella L. Frisbie and Mr. George R. Walden, of Napa. The family consists of eleven sons and daughters, besides the father and mother, all of whom were alive and present, coming together for the first time in a number of years. The youngest of the Frisbie family is 18 years of age, and every one of them is enjoying good health. The family consists of the father and mother, of Anderson, Shasta county; Mrs. E. S. King, of Junction City, Trinity county; Mrs. E. L. Bailey, of Lander county, Nevada; Mrs. Alvin Dozier, of Vallejo; Mrs. J. Borncke, of St. Helena; Mr. L. C. Frisbie, of Suisun; Mr. Charles Frisbie, of Anderson; Dr. E. G. Frisbie, of San Francisco; Mrs. G. R. Walden, nee Adella L. Frisbie, of Napa; Miss Jennie Frisbie, of Anderson; Mr. Nathaniel B. Frisbie, of Napa City; Mr. Henry Frisbie, of Anderson. Mr. Edward Frisbie, the father, is the owner of the famous Reading land grant, and a brother of Gen. John Frisbie, now in Mexico. The wedding took place April 22d, and Mr. and Mrs. Walden have gone to Napa to live, where he is engaged as chemist at the Napa Insane Asylum. Mr. Walden is also a P. M. W. of Fortuna Lodge, No. 13, A. O. U. W., of Napa, and was a Representative from that Lodge to the recent Grand Lodge. The WATCHMAN sincerely wishes the newly married couple a large measure of happiness and prosperity.

SUPREME REPRESENTATIVE M. T. Brewer having resigned, Clay W. Taylor was appointed to fill the vacancy. He accepted the position, but was afterwards also compelled to resign on account of professional duties. P. G. Ms. Jordan and Barnes will now probably be the only direct Representatives that California will have, but they can be relied upon to do it well.

To our Oregon and Washington Territory Subscribers.

Owing to some hitch in the mails the news for our Oregon and Washington Territory subscribers has not arrived in time for this issue. We hope, however, to have a well-filled news department for that jurisdiction for each succeeding issue. A. W. Thompson, former manager of the Lodge Visitor, is our duly appointed agent and correspondent for Portland and vicinity, and will probably also extend his work further out in the same jurisdiction. We also want a special agent and correspondent in every Lodge in the jurisdiction. To the right men we will offer very good terms. For further particulars write us direct.

Sound Judgment.

[Written for the WATCHMAN.]

That keen discrimination which leads one to a right conclusion of coming events, or a perceptive intuition of correct discrimination in regard to material relations, is one of the main factors of success in all operations, whether relating to finance, commerce, politics, religion, or to the daily routine of the artisan or clerk. By its exercise men have risen to the height of influence and power, thereby controlling or affecting the great questions concerning nations. Seeing then, the paramount importance of this most important faculty, how needful is it that those of us, especially young men, should cultivate a habit of close observation in all the intricate and complicated affairs of daily intercourse with men and events.

SYMELL.

THE PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, while not averse to making extracts from the columns of its contemporaries, seemingly dislikes to give full credit, alluding to the papers to which it is indebted as "Eastern exchanges." We prefer this, however, to having our articles copied without credit and then to see them going the rounds of the exchanges credited to the journal which appropriated them. This occurred at least once through the neglect of a "Western exchange" to give its customary credit to an "Eastern exchange."—Baltimore Protector.

[Do you not think, Brother Protector, that you exhibit considerable "gall" to publish a squib like the above, when in your next issue—that of May 3d—you copy entire a prize poem on "Fraternity," by Wm. H. Barnes, published and paid for by us, without as much as giving to any paper a line of credit, not even to a "Western exchange?" The WATCHMAN is not afraid to give credit where credit is due. Sometimes when an item of general interest has passed through so many fraternal papers as to lose its identity and all record of its origin (as such items frequently do), we credit it to an "Eastern exchange," rather than print it without credit at all.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

OFFICIAL VISITATIONS.—By reference to our Lodge Locals it will be seen that Deputy Grand Master Loud has been actively engaged in making official visits during the past fortnight. The following list of further appointments have been handed us: May 21st, Santa Rosa, No. 28; 23d, Healdsburg, No. 31; 26th, Santa Cruz, No. 46; 27th, Monterey, No. 98; 28th, Mt. Hamilton, No. 43, San Jose.

THE next issue of the WATCHMAN will be on June 14th. May having five Saturdays, and the WATCHMAN being issued on the 2d and 4th Saturdays of each month, will account for this interregnum of three weeks.

DEPUTY ADAMS is very assiduous in visiting Lodges in this city, especially those in his own district, No. 2.

ON April 30th, says the Protector, the A. O. U. W. Lodges located in Philadelphia celebrated the tenth anniversary of the institution of the Order in that city by a grand literary and musical celebration in the Academy of Music. The immense edifice was packed, there being over 5,000 persons present, and every place occupied. Upon the stage were many prominent city officials, citizens, representatives of newspapers, heads of departments, and prominent attorneys and clergymen.

Standard Time.

The accompanying map, designed to make plain the standard time now adopted by all the railway companies of the United States, was prepared by Rand, McNally & Co, the well-known map publishers of Chicago. Heretofore the railroad trains have been run under fifty-three different kinds of time; the number is now reduced to five, as follows: Inter-colonial, embracing Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; Eastern, embracing the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania and the States south of Pennsylvania; Central, including Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri and the States north and south of them; Mountain, comprising the roads west of the Missouri river in the mountains; and Pacific, embracing the lines on the Pacific coast. Could we have printed the maps in five colors the divisions would be better shown, but the shading renders them sufficiently distinct for our purpose. The time in which the earth makes a revolution was long ago divided into twenty-four parts known as hours, and in measuring distances around the earth from east to west the circumference of the globe has been divided into 360 parts, or degrees of longitude. The surface of the earth travels, therefore, as many degrees in one hour as 24 is contained in 360, which is 15. Hence the Snow Bound in the San Diego Mountains.

The term San Diego being known the country over as a synonym for all that is equable and delightful in climate, no one would think that snow could ever be mentioned in connection with the name. But San Diego county is a vast area, and back from the coast where ethereal mildness reigns, and above the valleys where streams of water leaking through the roof, and one night my underclothes were well washed, because of my failure to place them under the blankets, as usual, upon retiring, and had no dry clothes to put on in the morning. Another time on getting up, I found one of my boots half full of water. Such are some of the experiences of life.

We were 75 miles from the nearest railroad or telegraph station, and still we were not happy. Beans, potatoes, milk, butter, etc., were luxuries unknown. Our flour was exhausted, and our bill of fare consisted of fresh pork and honey exclusively. An Indian had been occupying this hut, herding hogs on the mountains. Fortunately, my Winchester was in good condition, and when we needed meat we helped ourselves. Wild bees are plentiful, and trees well stored with honey were not difficult to find. Hence our diet of fresh pork and honey. We longed for the storm to sufficiently subside, to enable us to get to a store for flour, so that we could ornament our bill of fare by adding "bread" thereto. We found it a trifle inconvenient to increase our weight, with our mountain diet and climate, but consoled ourselves with the thought that such experiences would be pleasant to think of when they had become matters of the past.

It stopped snowing and again commenced to rain. As I said, this was February 7th, and I expected to soon be released from my imprisonment. Although 12 of the 15 days we had been creaked under the weight of quail for several days.

We felt that fortune's frown had turned to favor, and that the worst of our experience was over. But on the next day, while sitting near a rousing fire cheerfully anticipating comforts just before us, the entire south wall of the adobe fell out. This occurred about 12:30 o'clock P. M., as near as we could estimate (we had not had the time for three weeks), and we were thus bereft of shelter. It was storming very hard. We expected every moment that the remaining wall would cave and the roof fly away. We slept in the remaining portion of the adobe that night, one keeping constant watch during the sleepless hours. The next day was the most violent of any during the storm. We sought the shelter of an old hog shed, driving out the swine, and there slept in wet blankets. The storm continued, and we worked at the old house to see if we could not prop up the standing walls so that they would be safe. We put in a temporary end of rails, strips of bark, brush, etc., and satisfied ourselves of its safety. Then, after six days residence in the hog shed, we surrendered it to the swine and moved back to our old home.

Finally on the 21st of February, the clouds suddenly broke away, and we were made glad by the appearance of the sun. It remained fair weather for several days, and we replenished the flour barrel and the mush bag. We packed our blankets and other things, and were difference in time between each succeeding 15 degrees of longitude, faster toward the east and slower towards the west.

The railroad officials of the continent decided to adopt as their standard of regulation the time of the Greenwich Observatory, London, England, and as the longitude in which their roads were situated was so many times fifteen degrees westward from Greenwich, they made their standard of time that many hours slower than Greenwich time. Hence the 60th degree of longitude is four hours slower than Greenwich time; the 75th, five hours slower; the 90th, six hours; the 105th, seven hours; and the 120th, eight hours--thus making five different standards between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

These five standards are shown on the map in the order mentioned at the top of the map.

The 90th meridian, on which Central time is based, is nine minutes slower than Chicago solar time. The 75th meridian, which gives Eastern time, is one hour faster than Central time, or four minutes slower than New York City solar time. Inter-colonial time, being based upon the 60th meridian, is two hours faster than the Central time. Mountain time, which is based upon the 105th meridian, is one hour slower than Central time. Pacific time, based upon the 120th meridian, is two hours slower than Central time.

The several meridians are indicated upon the map, as well as the territory included in the different divisions. The irregularity in the boundaries is caused by the various roads wishing to adopt as their standard the time of the meridian nearest to which the greater number of their lines are situated.

We are on this coast more particularly interested in the Mountain and Pacific standards.

heat rises high, there are mountains, and on these mountains sometimes the elements assert their rights. In a recent issue of the WATCHMAN we had occasion to refer to the detention from the Grand Lodge of Bro. Wm. C. Flint, and now have an opportunity to publish in full his experiences while there. The letter bears date of March 30:

On arriving at San Diego, January 13th, by steamer, we proceeded at once to Poway valley, 25 miles distant. Here we tarried for several days, and then departed for the mountains, 50 miles distant, depending on mustangs for locomotion. On the night of the second day we reached our destination and again tarried, and from present indications are likely to continue to tarry for some time yet. We had two beautiful days after we arrived, and then a terrible storm commenced, which continued with unabated fury for five days; then followed a lovely day, and signs of pleasant weather appeared on every hand, but the storm again set in that night, with increased violence, and it rained incessantly until Feb. 7th, when the wind shifted and it commenced to snow. Snow fell to the depth of a foot, and the fog was so dense that we could not prudently venture more than 300 yards from camp for fear of being lost. We were in an altitude of 6,000 feet, living in an old adobe hut. There was no other "house" in the mountains, and the nearest neighbor seven miles away down the mountains.

It is impossible at any time to ascend the mountains with a team, and the trail is so rough, rocky and steep, that descent on horseback is also impossible. We spent most of our time in unsuccessful efforts to keep dry. My "bunk" was in the driest spot in the "house," but it was the receptacle of four here had been stormy, the storm was yet in its incipency. Little time was required for the preparation of meals, because a meal consisting of pork and honey alone is easily and quickly prepared. Most of our time during the day was spent in getting food for our best friend, the old fire-place, which is four feet long, four and a half feet high and two feet deep. Sometimes, when it was not raining with its usual violence, we could find a corner in the old adobe dry enough to sit in and play a game of cribbage. The rain was constant, and no indication of clear weather appeared. Our tobacco was wet, and we could not get it dry enough to use. Our brandy was impregnated with turpentine, because put in the wrong jug, but still we did not complain. We were content to go out in the beating storm and spend a day to get wood enough to keep a fire at night, and sit with our wet clothes on by the hard-earned fire, and permit the water to trickle down the backs of our respective necks from the roof, but when the wind blew down the chimney so as to scatter the fire around the room, our comfort was materially interfered with, and we naturally protested. We had no candles, but a lamp. This could not be used, because the only chimney had been broken by particles of moisture falling thereon.

At length the dense fog cleared away, and the rain again turned to snow. When about six inches of snow had fallen we took our guns and boldly ventured out for quail. In less than three hours we had bagged 41 birds, and returned to our camp with safety. It seemed as if the fog had withdrawn expressly for the purpose of enabling us to make this hunt, because within two hours after our return it was again foggy. We discarded pork, and our table leaving the mountains when we met an unfortunate traveler who gave us the discouraging information that the roads were absolutely impassable. We turned back, and I imagine we appeared as if a 10-pound weight had been suddenly attached to our under lips. The adobe again received us.

Such a storm had been a thing unheard of in this country. No mails had been received at the postoffice for twelve days, and for some time before they had been carried on horseback. We enjoyed the fair weather, and resignedly awaited the time when we could depart. We lived comparatively well, and congratulated ourselves that we had not perished, but while we were thus rejoicing, another storm set in, without warning, which continued incessantly for eleven days. Fortunately, the remaining walls of the adobe had not fallen, if they had we would have been forced to hang ourselves up under the protecting branches of some fir or cedar tree, because the wind had removed the roof from the hog-house.

A few days after it cleared up I went to the store for provisions. My mustang got swamped a few times, but I made the trip successfully, and have been well supplied ever since. We purchased some baking powder, and determined to have some biscuit, if it should be the concluding act of our reckless careers. Being unfamiliar with the composition of baking powder, and not being certain that it was not an explosive substance, we used it sparingly, and our biscuit seemed to be somewhat discouraged. They were light in color, but for weight they could not be beaten. "Twas ever thus since childhood's happy hours." Last Monday (a week ago), the first team came through, and word came that the roads were passable to Poway. Thitherward I immediately made preparations to depart; but that night another storm set in and it has continued every moment since. The snow is now 18 inches deep, and still falling. The fire-place has caved away and the walls will doubtless follow soon. My companion is so badly "humped up" with the cold that the most vigorous effort will be required to straighten him out.

In the Yosemite Valley.

While the various minor gems of California scenery are becoming better known and thus afford joy and inspiration each year to larger numbers of visitors, the crowning glory of the State, the Yosemite, still stands peerless in its majesty—the wonder and admiration of the world. To the Yosemite is still, and probably always will be, the one great excursion of the State. Facilities for travel thither are constantly being improved and new lines of railroad are projected which promise to make the valley more accessible than ever before.

We have so often written and quoted from other writers concerning the Yosemite that it is refreshing to find a new authority on so old a theme, and to have engravings a little different from those of the same objects which have heretofore been published. We find this acceptable material in a recent English work entitled "Through America," by W. G. Marshall, published by Sampson, Low & Co., of London. We take therefrom the views on this page, and quote Mr. Marshall's appreciative description as follows:

One of the most remarkable characteristics of the Yosemite Valley is its extreme narrowness in comparison with the great heights deep down among which it is sunk. These heights do not incline, but rise in almost vertical masses, leaving behind them little or no debris, whilst their summits are beautifully clothed with pine, and their sides, too, where not actually vertical, are green with the foliage of pine and oak likewise.

But we are driving along the base of El Capitan, and the scene before us is grand and beautiful in the extreme. A succession of domes and peaks close in the valley to its furthest limit, presenting a sight that is truly magnificent. Beyond El Capitan on the same side, is a triple group of rocks called the Three Brothers, rising in steps the one above the other, at right angles to the valley. The loftiest of these mountains has a height of 3,820 feet.

Beyond El Capitan, on our left, comes in view the great sight of the valley. This is the Yosemite or "Great Grizzly Bear" fall, perhaps one of the most beautiful and glorious sights in the world. Even Norway's great waterfalls pale before this wonderful fall, not forgetting the Mørke-fos, Voring-fos, Skjægedal-fos and Rjukan-fos in the comparison. You look at it with wonder and delight. You feel that you have before you one of the sights—not only of the Yosemite valley, but of the world. It cannot be compared to Niagara, which is justly world-renowned for its immense and powerful cataracts, its gigantic bulk of waters, its never-ceasing roar.

But here we have a fall matchless for grace, form, height, impressiveness, beauty and grandeur, for its noble surroundings, for its grand accessories. We look in its direction and see a long line of sheer precipice, and over a ledge crowning a recess in the smooth face of an immense wall of rock, far away, as it seems, high up above, there pours a beautiful white sheet, which gently lets itself descend in one graceful drop the height of 1,600 feet clear. It descends in this one long leap into a tremendous trough it has hollowed out of the mountain, gradually spreading itself in its descent like a fan. Dashing up great clouds of spray, it bounds further on, making a second leap of 434 feet, when it is checked by a projecting ridge. Momentarily arrested, it then plunges still further, and makes a third and final descent of 600 feet, till it becomes hidden from view among the green oaks, willows and poplars that are thickly spread over the space intervening between us and the mountain, and which seem to receive its waters and hide them away. Thus the Yosemite fall consists in reality of three grand leaps, making up a visible descent of 2,634 feet.

But it is upon the first of these falls that one's attention is irresistibly concentrated. To say that it "leaps" or "plunges" is to use terms harsh and out of place when applied to the gentleness and grace with which it seems to descend. It neatly and gently lets itself top the scarce-visible ledge, and then descending a few hundred feet in a sort of twisted stream, it gracefully spreads out like a fan, shooting into a thousand rockets, till in time it becomes lost in the thick white cloud of spray which it showers up around. The two lower falls are both of them superb sights, and in Switzerland would be as much run after as the Reichenbach, or the Staubbach in Lauterbrunnen. But what Professor Whitney has observed is quite true. He says: "Either the domes or the waterfalls a few trees and vines is generally chosen as the basis of his operations. He then has behind him the wide expanses of hillside covered with honey-producing shrubs and plants, and before him the stretches of valley land, which, when not furrowed by the plow, afford a carpet of flowers until the arid summer sears the landscape. In the canyons of the mountains, where

A California Bee Ranch.

We give on this page a view of a California bee ranch. A little stretch of land moderately level, where the bee-keeper can locate his hives, build his modest habitation and plant ment of Mr. Archer, of Santa Barbara. The business of bee keeping in California demands the full application of talent and unceasing industry. Sometimes the rewards are greater than anywhere else in the world: sometimes through the vicissitudes of the seasons, the return is small and the fullest economy is called for. The bee keepers are a most honorable and desirable class of our population.

Delightful Ocean Jaunts.

One could hardly plan a summer excursion and include so much charming variety as by a trip to one of our southern county ports, and parts adjacent thereto, by one of the fine vessels of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company. This well-known transportation company has always manifested enterprise in securing new ships and furnishing them in an excellent manner, but this summer it is outdoing all its past record by the character of its floating palaces. The value of their line of coast steamers appeared very clearly during the wash-outs which came upon the railway line this winter. If it had not been for the steamers, travel and business would have been summarily stopped for a long period. Not long ago the Queen of the Pacific was put on the line, and last week the Santa Rosa left San Francisco on her first regular trip. The Santa Rosa was built by John Roach & Company for the Pacific Coast Steamship Company of this city, and is adapted expressly for their San Diego route. Her interior arrangements and fittings are neat and elegant. Amidship is the social hall, which must be seen to be fully appreciated. The dome overhead, provided with colored glass filled with various devices, presents a beautiful appearance and is in keeping with the fittings of the entire interior of the apartment. The seats are upholstered in gray velvet, and with the rich curtains of the same color, contrast favorably with a dark Brussels carpet underfoot. Forward of the social hall area number of bridal chambers, beautifully furnished. The grand staircase leading down from the social hall to the dining saloon, is a marvel of beauty; the electric lights at the head of the stairs being supported by dolphins, and the dining saloon on the main deck, fitted up fully as elegantly as the other parts of the vessel, with its glittering mass of racks with glasses of all hues and colors, and beautiful flowers, arranged with taste and care, made the scene below during the evening, when the electric lights were in use, a most brilliant one. The vessel is 326 feet long, 40 9-10 feet beam, and 20 7-10 feet depth of hold, her gross tonnage being 2,416; under deck, 2,013, and net tonnage, 1,335 6-10.

The use of the new vessels makes it possible to materially lessen the time of the voyage, something like eight hours being saved on the run from San Francisco to Los Angeles. We expect soon to give engravings showing the improvements in San Pedro bay and Wilmington.

By steamer from San Francisco, and by rail and stage from the southern ports, one can reach all the famous resorts in the southern half of the State. Santa Barbara and surroundings, the Ojai valley, Los Angeles, Pasadena, San Gabriel and the Sierra Madre Villa, Pomona and Ontario, and beyond, are the Waterman and Arrowhead Springs, near San Bernardino; also Crafton Retreat, the Redlands, etc. Near by also is Riverside. By continuing the voyage to San Diego and then working back by rail and stage, one can see all the famous points in the south and return enriched with a knowledge of the natural beauties of the country, and admiration of the enterprising southern people.

Those in search of delightful ocean trips, should not overlook the grand scenery of the North Pacific coast, to be reached by the steamers of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Co. from San Francisco. The peerless Columbia river, the thriving towns of Oregon and Washington Territory, and still beyond the new land of Alaska, with its grand forests and glaciers and beautiful waters. All these are now easily reached by established routes of travel, and reward the tourist by more majestic views than can be obtained anywhere.

of the Yosemite, or any single one of them, even, would be sufficient in any European country, to attract travelers from far and wide in all directions. Waterfalls in the vicinity of the Yosemite, surpassing in beauty many of those best known and most visited in Europe, are actually left entirely unnoticed by travelers, because there are so many objects of interest to be visited that it is impossible to find time for them all."

there can be found suitable bee pasturage and a place for the hives, the bee-keeper finds his way and plants his industry, thinking little of the loneliness of the situation, content to forego the pleasure of neighbors while he pursues an honest livelihood for himself and his family. Most bee-keepers are devoted students of nature and close observers, and in their retired haunts they always find food for reflection. Meantime their daylight hours are fully employed, for the life of the beekeeper is not an idle one.

OUR CITY LODGES

San Francisco, No. 4.

San Francisco Lodge, No. 4, held a rousing meeting on Wednesday evening, May 14th, on the occasion of amendments to the by-laws, a grand effort having been made to adopt sick benefits. The majority were in favor of paying them, but it did not get the two-thirds required. The brothers, however, yet feel confident that in the near future San Francisco, No. 4, will fall in line with the sick-benefit paying Lodges.

Sts. John, No. 73.

A scene seldom witnessed took place on Thursday evening, May 15th, being the presentation of jewels by Sts. John Lodge, No. 73, to four of its P. M. Ws., viz.: Brothers Henry Blair, Thos. Patten, J. D. Wheelock and Owen M. Smythe. The jewels were presented by Brother H. K. McJunkin with appropriate remarks.

Lecture Course of Excelsior, No. 126.

The last of the admirable series of lectures given under the auspices of the ladies of Golden Dawn, No. 10, D. of H., for the benefit of the library of Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, will be delivered on Thursday evening, May 29th. The lecturer on this occasion will be Mr. Walter M. Leman, whose 40 years experience behind the footlights has given him excellent opportunities for becoming familiar with his subject, viz.: "The Drama and the Stage." Hitherto these lectures have hardly realized the expectations of their projector, and have added but little to the excellent object for whose benefit they were gotten up. The ability of the lecturer, whose services were given gratuitously, and the low price of admission, ought to have filled the house every time. Brethren and sisters, turn out and let the last one be a bumper. Admission, 25 cents; Excelsior hall, 2319 Mission street; lecture to commence at 8:15.

Memorial, No. 176.

The members of this Lodge are making preparations to celebrate their anniversary on or about the 10th of June.

Golden Dawn, No. 10, D. of H.

The second lecture of the course delivered under the auspices of this enterprising and social subordinate, was given in Excelsior hall, Thursday evening, May 15th, and except that it was not quite so numerously attended as it deserved, was in other respects pleasant and enjoyable. Mr. Silas A. White, a former member of the Lodge, was the lecturer, and expressed his delight at meeting once more the old friends whom he had formerly addressed as brothers and sisters. His subject was, "Improvements in our hearths and homes, or the old times and the new." The lecture was "illustrated" by a numerous collection of improved cooking and other utensils useful or indispensable in a well regulated household, and comparing them with the old-fashioned, clumsy and inadequate things used for similar purposes in the old times. The lecture was listened to with the utmost interest by all present, and especially the lady part of the audience, who doubtless congratulated themselves that their lot was cast in the new times and countries, where such accessories and conveniences were easily attainable, and their lives and duties rendered thereby so much more happy and comfortable.

At the regular meeting of the Lodge on Saturday evening, May 10th, instead of the usual literary and musical social, an adjournment was had to the supper room, where, under the superintendence of Brother and Sister Gunnison, a bountiful table had been spread and elegantly ornamented with flowers, the guests, besides members of the Lodge, being the Past and present Chief of Honor of Union, the new Lodge recently formed in this city. A pleasant hour was spent around the festive board, concluding a most enjoyable evening.

In the course of the regular Lodge business some half dozen new members were proposed for membership.

Union, No. 29, D. of H.

Union Lodge, No. 29, Degree of Honor, on Thursday evening, May 15th, initiated six new candidates, and passed the 100 mark. This is pretty healthy for the baby D. of H. of the State, to have the largest membership in so short a time as two months. Under the head of "Good of the Order," Chief of Honor Susie Goody favored the Lodge with a song. Sisters Silverstine and Smith also sang. Brother Wilson gave a recitation and Brother Blythe read a poem. A good time was had, quite a number of visitors being present.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

Pacific, No. 7.

Last Thursday evening, in Oakland, at the regular meeting, Past Grand Master W. F. Jordan, who is also a member of this Lodge, delivered to the members a very interesting lecture on astronomy. After the Lodge closed he practically illustrated the lecture by conducting the members in a body to the Chabot Observatory, of which he is a Director, and an opportunity was given to view the heavens through the magnificent telescope. Friday evening, June 6th, Pacific will pay a fraternal visit to Occidental, No. 6. A handsome tribute was recently presented by the members of Pacific to Brother A. A. Guernsey, retiring Receiver, in the shape of an elegant A. O. U. W. gold watch charm.

Mission, No. 56.

Last Saturday evening Deputy Grand Master Loud paid an official visit to this Lodge at Mission San Jose. The Lodge held a short session in anticipation of what was to follow soon after. After a brief address by Brother Loud and the exemplification of the work, the hall was cleared for a grand ball, which had been in contemplation for some time. This, with a bountiful supper made up a very enjoyable night's entertainment.

Eden, No. 204.

This Lodge at San Lorenzo recently presented H. W. Meek with a handsome P. M. W. badge; also with a gold charm bearing on either side the Masonic and A. O. U. W. emblems. It was the plan that these good brothers adopted of congratulating this Past Master of Eden on the eve of his taking an Eve.

AMADOR COUNTY.

Banner, No. 131.

Deputy Grand Master E. F. Loud paid this Lodge at Plymouth an official visit, Wednesday evening, May 14th. He was well received and welcomed with a supper after the Lodge was over. Thirty-three out of some forty-odd members were in attendance. The Lodge routine comprised an address and exemplification of the work by the D. G. M.

Amador, No. 133.

This Lodge, located at Amador City, was the recipient of an official visit from Deputy Grand Master Loud, on Tuesday, May 13th. The attendance was good, there being over 30 members present out of a total of something over 40. The M. W. degree was conferred in fair style, after which Past Master Jno. R. Tregloan welcomed the visitors who besides the Deputy Grand Master, included delegations from sister Lodges. Interesting remarks were also made by visiting brothers of Jackson, No. 138, Judges J. W. Eagon and Jos. Griffiths, Past Masters, and M. W. Silas Penry, District Attorney of the county.

Also Brothers John O'Neal, M. W. of Sutter Creek, No. 158, and Morris Brunn. After the exemplification of the work by the D. G. M., the Lodge adjourned to the Amador hotel, where a bounteous supper was served. District Deputy J. F. Parks presided, and after the meal was finished, Brother Loud delivered an address. One of the pleasant features of the Lodge meeting was an artistic and beautiful floral piece made by Mrs. Giles, of Amador, placed in front of the Master's stand, and composed of the letters "A. O. U. W."

Jackson, No. 138.

Thursday evening, May 15th, Deputy Grand Master Loud called in on the brethren of Jackson. He found them at home and prepared to give him a warm reception. Brother Loud exemplified the work and delivered an address. Commenting on this the Jackson Dispatch says: "Mr. Loud is a very pleasant gentleman and an interesting talker, and appears to be taking great interest in the Order in whose behalf he is making a tour of the State." Remarks were also made by Past Masters Littlefield, J. A. Eagon, S. W. Griffith, A. B. Sanborn, Silas Penry and District Deputy J. F. Parks; also by Brothers Jas. Meahan, H. D. Ford of Ione, County Assessor, and J. R. Price of No. 35. After the Lodge was over, all adjourned to the Central hotel, where a fine supper was served and much enjoyment experienced.

Ione, No. 141.

The Amador Dispatch says that Ione Lodge has been experiencing the good effect of a boom this term, under the mastership of Frank Frates. That brother has gone energetically to work, and with the result of adding a large number of good members.

BUTTE COUNTY.

Picnic of Chico, No. 58.

The May-day picnic at Chico, says one of the local papers, though not so well attended as on former occasions, was a success in every particular. The clouds in the morning, coupled with the fate of the Odd Fellows' picnic the Saturday previous, frightened a great many who would have otherwise attended. Those who went however (and they were not a few) found Chico and vicinity, as well as the people living there, in their gayest dress and merriest mood. The procession, consisting of nearly all the civic and military organizations of Chico, handsomely uniformed, and headed by the band, started for the grove at 10 A. M. The march was through the elegant grounds of General Bidwell, and across the railroad to one of the prettiest groves in California. At the grove everybody seemed happy, and the afternoon soon slipped away amidst literary exercises, music, dancing, games, riding, driving, etc. At evening everybody went to the party at Bidwell Hall and danced until 12 o'clock.

MODOC COUNTY.

Lookout Lodge, No. 211.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—As I stated in a former communication, our Lodge gave a social entertainment on its second anniversary, Jan. 11, and, from results so far, it has made a favorable impression on the community, as we have gained five members since then, making our present membership twenty-nine. Since the Grand Lodge has changed the boundary of our district, I think we will soon receive additional applications. Our Lodge is in fine working order. The officers, when possible, are always found at their several stations, our M. W., Brother W. E. Page, having been absent but one meeting since Jan. 1st, although living some distance from here with a lake to cross. Our Receiver, Brother S. C. Mooers, has held his office since the Lodge was instituted, which proves his faithfulness as an officer. Our P. M. W., Brother W. D. Morris, has done earnest work for the Lodge, both as Lodge officer and as representative to the Grand Lodge.

Fraternally yours,

E. ETZENHOUSER, Recorder.

NAPA COUNTY.

Fortuna, No. 13.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—We were favored on last Wednesday evening with a fraternal and official visit of Brother E. F. Loud, Deputy Grand Master of this jurisdiction. The Lodge members turned out well, and a number of visiting brothers were present, among the number being Past Master Workman J. W. Hostetler, of Valley, No. 30, and Brother Meyer, of Los Angeles. After some very interesting remarks from Brother Loud, he instructed the Lodge in a portion of the unwritten work, and called upon the Lodge and its officers to work other portions of the unwritten and ritualistic work. Brother Loud expressed himself as much pleased at the manner in which the officers and members of the Lodge did their work and transacted the general business of the Lodge, and after some more interesting remarks under "Good of the Order," one of our most pleasant meetings of the present term was closed.

Eureka, No. 15.

This Lodge, at St. Helena, received an official visit from Deputy Grand Master E. F. Loud, Tuesday, May 6th. Owing to short previous notice and the fact that a new Chapter of Royal Arch Masons was being instituted that evening, in which a number of the leading members were interested, the attendance was light. The Lodge is said to be somewhat lethargic and needs livening up. Here as in other places visited, the Deputy Grand Master delivered an address and exemplified the work.

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.

Stockton, No. 23.

Deputy Grand Master Loud paid this old subordinate an official visit Friday evening, May 16th. Owing to Brother H. W. Taylor, the Recorder, having had the misfortune to break his leg, he was not able to give due notice to the brethren of the D. G. M.'s visit. There was a fair attendance, however, and a pleasant meeting. After the usual exemplification of the work and an address by Brother Loud, interesting remarks were made by J. M. La Rue, P. M. W., and E. M. Cadien, District Deputy. An adjournment was then had to a convenient resort, where oysters on the half-shell were discussed.

SAN MATEO COUNTY.

Redwood, No. 25.

This Lodge received a visit from Deputy Grand Master E. F. Loud, Friday evening, May 2d. The attendance was quite good, over 40 members being present. Brother Loud made an address and exemplified the work. The meeting was a pleasant one. The next day Brother Loud was the guest of Brother George H. Buck, Recorder of the Lodge and District Attorney of the county, who showed him the sights of the country.

San Mateo, No. 192.

Saturday evening, May 3d, Deputy Grand Master Loud paid a visit to this young Lodge. The interest was very good and the attendance was fair. After remarks by District Deputy J. McLaren, Brother Loud exemplified the work and delivered an address.

SOLANO COUNTY.

Vallejo, No. 75.

Friday evening, May 9th, Deputy Grand Master Loud paid an official visit to Vallejo, No. 75, and was well received. The attendance was good, and the membership being made up of superior men, a fine meeting was the result. Under "Good of the Order" interesting remarks were made by Past Masters Jas. Blessington, W. A. Brace, Wm. McWilliams, A. S. Hatheway and Brother George J. Campbell. Brother Loud also exemplified the work and delivered an address. We should like to hear more frequently from this sterling Lodge with its 120 odd members.

STANISLAUS COUNTY.

Oak Grove, No. 198.

Brother O. H. Wiard, Recorder of this Lodge at Oakdale, writes as follows: "We are doing first rate as a Lodge—that is we have a good lot of members composed of as good citizens as there are in the county, and we have an application occasionally. But we must have something to take the place of or counteract the 'Uniform Ranks,' as those ranks of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias are taking the lead in this part of the country. Our members are mostly in favor of the Select Knights if they are an auxiliary of the Order. But if they are not, we do not want to invest in that kind of stock. We have 32 members and their hearts are all in the right place—all marching on to the great heart-beat of the A. O. U. W., but we do feel as if the Order ought to keep step with the times." We are informed that next Monday, the 26th instant, this Lodge will give an anniversary picnic, at which Deputy Grand Recorder, J. W. Watson will deliver the oration.

TUOLUMNE COUNTY.

The Grand Master at Sonora, No. 197.

EDS. WATCHMAN:—G. M. W. David McClure visited Sonora Lodge, Monday, May 19th, where he received a most cordial welcome. A number of visiting members from a sister Lodge, Oak Grove, No. 198, of Oakdale, Stanislaus county, together with Sonora Lodge, also serenaded him at the hotel. The next day there was a grand picnic, at which Brother F. W. Street delivered an address of welcome, to which the Grand Master appropriately responded. Z.

NEVADA.

Gold Hill, No. 2.

The musical and literary entertainment by Gold Hill Lodge, No. 2, A. O. U. W., at Miners' Union Hall, Gold Hill, Tuesday night, the 6th inst., was a grand success, both financially and socially speaking, says the Virginia City Enterprise. The introductory address, by Professor Dovey, was replete with historical wisdom and exhaustive study, and was listened to with rapt attention. The merits of the Order were ably discussed and the necessities for such an Order were fully demonstrated. He retired amidst applause. The singing by the Virginia quartet, composed of Mrs. Layton, Miss Cogswell and Messrs. Patton and Rule was splendid, and received merited applause. The recitation by Master Wyckoff, "Lost Steamship," was carefully studied, well rendered and greatly applauded. A song was given by Lottie Booth, "Get Along, Joseph, Do," dressed in a boy's suit. The little comedienne won great applause, and in response to an encore she sang "Courtin' in the Rain." Miss Champlain sang "Sing, Sweet Bird." She appeared in excellent voice, and warbled her bird-notes as sweetly as the nightingale, retiring amid deserved applause. Miss Edith Cowan recited "The Gambler's Wife," and received merited applause. The duet by Mesdames Swift and Nanetta, "All's Well," was nicely rendered and much applauded. A recitation was given by Hon. James A. Stephens on Lord Byron. Even the study of elocution was made manifest, and he reviewed Lord Byron as he stood in the days of yore, and brought his hearers face to face with the great and ever-living poet. The song and chorus, "Only to See Her Face Again," by Mrs. Gladding, Miss Cogswell, Messrs. Williams and Rule, was well received. The song by Mrs. A. S. Layton, "When the Robins Nest Again," was sung with her usual good taste, and she being in fine voice, it was a real treat, as all agreed. The recitation by Miss Maggie Brewer was cleverly rendered and well received. The song "Waiting" was sung by Miss Nellie Parkinson. Cultivation and study, with a fine voice, made this the gem of the evening. It was roundly encored, and in response she sang the "Milkmaid's Marriage." Mrs. J. A. Stephens sang a beautiful song, entitled "My Kingdom." The music was beautiful, and the song was loudly encored, and in response she sang, "To Lay at the Feet of My Love." The recitation by Frank Richard, "St. Pierre of Ferrada," was rendered with precision, and was quite perfect in every particular. "Good Night" was sung by the Sutor quartet—Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Roberts, Messrs. Rowland and Williams. It was a splendid rendition, and was loudly encored. The programme was carried out in every particular, and most successfully.

San Francisco Select Knights.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—San Francisco Legion of Select Knights will be instituted the latter part of June. On the charter list are the names of P. G. M., Wm. H. Jordan, Grand Master David McClure, Grand Overseer Edwin Danforth, several District Deputies, and many prominent members of San Francisco and Oakland Lodges. The Deputy Supreme Commander, W. A. Fox, will visit San Francisco and vicinity in the month of June.

There are over 7,000 members in this uniform rank now. The States of New York, Pennsylvania and Missouri have the largest number. There is at present but one Legion in California—California Legion, No. 1, of Los Angeles. There seems to be considerable inquiry at the present time from members of the Order throughout the State. Brother I. E. Alexander, P. M. W. of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, has received several letters from country Lodges asking for information about the Select Knights and how to proceed to institute a Legion. The uniform rank has undoubtedly done the Order a great deal of good in the States that have adopted it, in the way of inducing young men to join the Order. It also, on all public occasions, attracts the attention of the public to the Order. X.

Los Angeles Select Knights.

California Legion, No. 1, Select Knights. A. O. U. W., gave a social and reception at Armory Hall, says the Recreation, Saturday evening, the 3d instant, that ranks among the most enjoyable affairs of the kind that have taken place this season. A large concourse of the Knights and their friends were in attendance, and the wealth, fashion and beauty of Los Angeles was well represented. The hall had been beautifully decorated and was brightly illuminated. Mr. S. A. Widney, S. K. C., had been appointed to deliver an address, which was the first thing on the programme for the evening. He spoke briefly but clearly, giving a general outline of the aims and objects of the organization, the benefits derived, and the future of the Order, and ended with an exhortation to the Knights to live up to the high aims of the organization. Mr. Widney's speech was highly applauded by his many auditors. Following this came the grand ball, which was participated in by a large number of young people, who "chased the hours with flying feet" until a late hour.

In Memoriam

Hall of Union Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W.

To the Officers and Members of Union Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W.: Your committee to whom was assigned the duty of drafting some expression of the sense and feelings of this Lodge in relation to our late brother, JOHN BRADLEY, beg leave to submit the following:

Death has invaded our brotherhood and taken from among us one of our most active, esteemed and worthy members. He was in every sense of the term a true man, a beloved and honored member of our Order, and an esteemed citizen of Sacramento. BROTHER JOHN BRADLEY, deceased, has been a power in Union Lodge. His life was, in a measure, devoted to the cause of the Workmen of California, and especially to Union Lodge. His ambition was to excel in doing good for the Order generally, and especially the Lodge to which he belonged. His constant study was to build up and promote fraternity and social intercourse between man and man and the brotherhood of our Order. He never lost an opportunity to induce a worthy man to become a member of our Order, and through his influence many true and good men have joined us. BROTHER BRADLEY's place in life was humble so far as wealth and position are concerned, yet he filled his place like a hero and the true man that he was. In his sphere of life there were none better, yet none so lowly that he exalted himself above them. He was an unassuming man, yet firm and outspoken, and never afraid to make known his honest convictions. In his discussion of Lodge questions pertaining to the good of the Order, he did not display those graces of expression that finished oratorical ability usually possesses, but his truths came in simple, unadorned form, carrying conviction with a judicious display of logic.

In social life BROT. BRADLEY was a whole-souled, genial, jovial man, hospitable to his neighbors, friends, and charitable to all, however humble or lowly their positions in life might be. And in his domestic sphere he was a true and devoted husband and indulgent father.

Resolved, That the above are the true sentiments of this Lodge, and that while we bow in humble obedience to Divine will in thus depriving us of our brother in the prime of life and the full vigor of manhood, we can but mourn his untimely loss. We heartily tender to the widow and son of our deceased brother our sincere condolence, and bid them be of good cheer, for their loss is Heaven's gain.

Resolved, That a copy hereof be properly attested by the M. W. and Recorder, and forwarded to the widow of our deceased brother, spread upon the minutes of this Lodge, and also be published in the WATCHMAN.

Business Notes.

SEND for the "Household" Sewing Machine, or a catalogue and handsome cards, to Samuel Hill's Estate, No. 634 Market street, S. F.

If you want hardware, cutlery and tools, you can find a complete assortment, at bedrock prices, at Bro. W. A. Etting's store, 110 Sixth street.

BRO. WM. H. PORTER has removed his office to 116 Eddy street. At this place he has fitted up an undertaking establishment that in appointments and equipage are superior.

GOODWIN'S New England sausage and sugar-cured, boneless breakfast bacon has attained a State reputation for excellence and flavor. "The finest in the State" can be procured at stalls, 15 and 32 Center Market, Sutter street.

BRO. J. D. HORAN has an extensive stock and sale yard, corner of 10th and Howard. He has had a large experience in this business and has the reputation of being a sagacious and trust-worthy commission agent for the sale of horses and cattle.

WE are pleased to learn that L. Meininger has been re-appointed Notary Public. He is reputed to be an efficient and reliable officer. His office is 306 Montgomery street, and any business entrusted to him will likely be promptly and legally executed.

WE take pleasure in calling attention to Bro. F. Jos. Lochner, merchant tailor, 209 Post. He has for his patrons the elite of our city. Increasing business has induced him to enlarge his parlors and stock them with a fine line of domestic and imported suitings.

W. C. PRICE & Co., Produce and Shipping Merchants, 309 and 311 Washington St., have built up an immense business as commission merchants. Bro. W. C. Price, the active business manager has the reputation of being a shrewd, sagacious and reliable merchant.

THE Goodenough Horseshoeing Shop, 177 Jessie, in the rear of the Palace Hotel, of which Bro. Thomas Doyle is proprietor, is a popular place for those who wish skilled work, especially to Trotters and Runners. He has for his motto: "To suit or no charge."

THE T. M. Antisell Piano Co., 24 and 26 Ellis street, near Market, opposite the Baldwin Hotel, are manufacturing an Antisell Organ and a New Improved Piano, strings, patent elliptic agraffes, double repeating action, elegant cases, carved rosewood, double veneered, finest ivory keys, felt hammers, patent London strings. The leading pianos can be had here for rent or sale. Bro. Antisell cordially invites patrons of music to call and inspect his piano factory.

It is quite a common, prudent and economical custom for families to pack and keep in store butter that is made in summer for winter use. Bro. M. T. Freitas, who has the agency of a number of Punta Reyes and Saucelito dairies, makes a specialty of filling orders of this kind. Parties who wish can secure the services of Bro. Freitas, commission merchant and dealer in butter, cheese, eggs, etc., 212 Clay street.

THE growing interest in fraternal, social and beneficiary societies and clubs has established a custom of celebrating anniversaries and having periodical literary entertainments and banquets. It has been found by experience that to give a banquet with comfort and becoming style, a very large room is required, with appropriate fixtures and accessories. The Royal Dining Saloon, 120 Post street, has become under its present management very popular for those who wish to entertain in a royal manner, at reasonable prices.

BROTHER J. G. ARMSTRONG, after serving ten years as Grand Recorder in New York, resigned his position because the Grand Lodge would not pay him a sufficient salary, and now he has secured a much more lucrative position as special agent for the New York Life Insurance Company. As the Grand Recorder is the only paid officer of any jurisdiction and must devote all his time and possibly have an assistant, it is a small-sighted piece of business not to pay him a sufficient salary for himself and give him enough for at least a living salary for an assistant.—Protector.

O. C. NIELSON writes from Grass Valley: "We value the WATCHMAN very highly, and would not like to be without it."

CURE OF ELEPHANTIASIS BY ELECTRICITY.
An interesting communication on the treatment and cure of elephantiasis among Arabs by Doctors Monrovo and Silva Arango has been presented to the French Academy of Sciences by M. Gosselin. The cure consists in decomposing the tumid swelling of the limbs, known as elephantiasis, by means of electrolysis, but at the same time the general health of the patient is also treated hydropathically, that is to say, by the cold water cure, sea baths, tincture of iodine, iodide of iron, arsenic, and other tonics. These medicines are intended to renovate the constitution, but are not of themselves sufficient to reduce the tumors. Electropathy, however, applied as soon as possible after the first manifestation, checks, and ultimately cures it. The cure is generally perfect, and takes place at the end of a few days in some cases; but if the elephantiasis is of long standing the cure is also a long process, and must be accompanied by proper medicines. The electrolysis is effected both by continuous and interrupted currents sent through the tumid swelling.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W. and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be part-takers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO.,
252 Market Street S. F., C.

Every Member of the A. O. U. W.
Should Subscribe for the "Pacific
States Watchman."

It is officially recommended by the Order on the Pacific coast.

Splendidly illustrated, reliable and chaste.

The WATCHMAN is published semi-monthly—on the 2d and 4th Saturday of each month.

It is one of the best home and family papers on the coast and this feature commends it to all Workmen and all members of their families.

The subscription price is only $2 per year, payable in advance.

It is a worthy representative of the Order, a profitable companion for every member to read and consult, and a friend that each can take pride in recommending to readers everywhere. Its circulation has been of immense benefit to our noble Order and many of its individual members, who read and patronize its many enterprising and sterling issues. All Workmen should lend it a helping voice and hand.

Advertisers will find it one of the best means of reaching a class of readers, including many Workmen and others who are large buyers in the aggregate.

Good Agents are wanted at all times, to whom large commissions will be paid.

SAMPLE copies sent free for circulation and examination with a view of increasing its subscription list.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times), by turning a leaf.

Progress in Science.

The developments of physiological sciences have received a wonderful impetus within the last ten years. Twenty odd years ago, according to the chief literature on ophthalmology, we find very conflicting opinions entertained by many eminent physiologists regarding the pathology of the eye when a accommodation was not understood nor the cardinal points of physiological dioptries. Astigmatism of the eye is very often treated for amblyopia, amiosis, etc., while it is a mechanical defect, and can be corrected by simple or compound lenses correcting the errors of refraction. Many to this day don't comprehend the difference of refraction or accommodation. Old sight, or presbyopia, is ranked with a faulty formation, and the belief still exists in the minds of many that as a person grows older the eyes flatten. Having tested over 2,000 complicated cases of defective sight in the last three years, which I have a record of, I confidently solicit all who are troubled with painful forebodings of loss of sight and defective vision, inflammation of the eyes, to avail themselves of my professional services free of charge.

SELF-OPENING AND CLOSING AUTOMATIC GATE.

For simplicity and durability it is the only reliable Gate now in use. No complex machinery about it. By a simple lever it is thrown off the center of gravity, and opens and closes itself by its own weight. A child six years old can open and close it sitting in a buggy.

It is THE GATE when driving a skittish horse or young colt, or when ladies do their own driving.
No Fancy Residence should be without them, and every Farmer should have them where there is a Gate used. He will save time, besides taking the chances of his team leaving him while closing the old common Gate.

These Gates are almost as cheap as any common Farm Gate. They are durable, never get out of order, and will last a lifetime.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

OF THE

MUTUAL SELF-ENDOWMENT AND BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

Department Officers:

O. C. WHEELER, D.D., LL.D., President. J. N. RUSSELL, Sr., Superintendent.
W. E. WARD, Vice-President. J. N. RUSSELL, Jr., Secretary.
W. E. TAYLOR, M. D., Medical Director. CAL. SAVINGS BANK, Treasurer.

OFFICE: No. 7 Powell St., Cor. Market, San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT of this Association is to provide endowments for living members, as well as benefit for families of deceased members, at the least cost consistent with perfect security, by issuing endowment and death benefit certificates. THE PLAN endows two forms: Life and Death. One pays at the death of a member, and the other pays during life at given periods, in accordance with a schedule of payments attached to each certificate of membership. The Association is operated on the Mutual Plan. There are no large meetings. Where there are enough members to form a club they select a club manager who collects all dues and assessments. All club managers and agents are required to give good bonds. This is the only Association which pays members during life on the installment plan, and educates the children of deceased members without cost to its members.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT ENDOWMENT LOANS.

Below we give the names, with post office address, of members in this department to whom loans or advances on their Endowment Certificates have been made to date. The names are taken as they appear on our statements. Payable Book, and all in good standing are loaned in their order of maturity. This department, established September, 1880, has upwards of Thirteen Hundred members, with a steady increase each month.
